THE QUEEN OF THE NIGHT.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JACK PERCY.

Bumpers all, from left to right,
Here's to Ida—Queen of the Night;
She with the eyes so blue and bright,
Sparkling over with living light;
Here's to Ida—Queen of the Night,
Long may her reign endure.

The light shines down on a motley crew;
Velvets and silks of every hue,
Diamonds and garnets glittering here,
Rubies and amethysts sparkling there;
Loud the cheer which greeted the toast—
Infamy's heathens could scarcely boast
Of another syren so gay and fair
As the Queen of the Night,
With the dark brown hair.

The wine flies round—now Reason has fled,
Far from her throne, and Passion instead
Usurps her place, and scenes of fray
Is the Queen of the Night—fair Ida May.

* * * * * *

Dark is the night—wintry and drear,
And the waves dash sullenly 'gainst the pier;
The air resems filled with dying groans,
As the crazy structure sighs and moans;
Ragged, forlorn, [illegible]
Far out on the [illegible] through the prices of Forsaken, alone, [illegible]
Stands Ida May; and this is the end [illegible]

There's a splash in the water, a gurgling shriek,
The waters close o'er her so fair and so weak.
So sped Ida—Queen of the Night,
"Out of the darkness into the light;"
Drifting on unknown seas.

CHAPTER XVI.

When food of power, of beauty rain,
The not she spreads for every swain
I strove to break, but vainly strove—
Tell me, my heart, if this be love.

"If you please, Miss Tyrrell, Sir Henry wishes to know how you are this morning, and he has sent you this, and will you please answer it?" was the salutation that greeted Rosalind when she was at length roused from the stupefaction rather than sleep which had benumbed her faculties for a few brief hours. She passed her hand over her eyes, and tried to recall the incidents that had left that vague sense of horror which is so dreadful to the returning senses after a heavy sorrow. But the maid who was standing by her bedside was too impatient to do her errand, to endure such delay.

"Look, Miss Tyrrell, what beautiful flowers! I am sure Sir Henry could not have sent rarer ones to my lady herself. He thought they would cheer you. I suppose, as you were tired last night. Dear me, I don't think I should ever be tired of dancing and singing and being admired, as Hunter says you were last night, miss, and master knows what's what, I expect, though he is married. Please to open the note, miss!"

Rosalind scarcely noticed the girl's voluble chatter. Her whole mind was bent on the kindly meaning she attached to the beautiful floral gift, and when at length recalled to the necessity of replying to Mar'a's final words, she opened the note with the perfect unembarrassment of unconscious candor.

"MY DEAR MISS TYRRELL"—it ran—"I am going to ride early, as I have to call on a friend some few miles off, and to return to luncheon. Will you take pity on my loneliness and go with me? Ida is still in her retreat, but what we shall be happy to see is the flag that is visible. Yours, most faithfully, HENRY GREVILLE."

Tears rushed into the girl's eyes at the contrast of this kindly frankness and wish to please with Lady Greville's harshness, and, with a restless desire to escape for a time from her perplexing misery, and it might be to obtain some counsel from a friend, one who was at once a powerful friend, she determined to accept the tempting offer, hastily writing on a slip of paper:—"I will gladly accompany you—ROSALIND," she dismissed the maid.

She sprang from her bed, her head dizzy from the mental and bodily suffering she had endured for the last few hours, and hastily began to dress. After a while re-appeared with a cup of fragrant coffee and a snowy roll to tempt her sickly fancy, and Rosalind, too shocked, gladly accepted the refreshment, then proceeded to conclude her toilet with the girl's assistance. Very beautiful she looked, albeit pale and thoughtful, when dressed at length in the becoming riding costume which was so once so graceful and so modest. The dark green riding habit, with its snowy cuffs and [illegible] white riding hat with its plume of green and white feathers were the especial gift of Sir Henry, and in their wavy deprecation the timidity of his wife which compelled him to ride alone, or with mere strangers, and he hailed the advent of an accomplished horsewoman like Rosalind Tyrell with delight. Her exquisite skin never displayed its purity more completely than in the absence of the bloom that usually somewhat softened its delicate hue, and the large, expressive eyes looked even more intensely beautiful from the thoughtful pensiveness of their expression.

"Well, she is a beauty and a lady—that I must say, whoever she is," [illegible] Maria, as she looked after the equestrians from the chamber window and noted Rosalind's fearless seat and the graceful carriage of her whole figure. "It's a wonder if my master [illegible] not see it, too, for she beats my lady hollow, though [illegible] a pretty little creature; but then she's not so young as she has been. Miss Rosalind is not a score yet, I'll answer for it."

Then Maria turned to the fulfilment of her other duties till Lady Greville's bell sounded with a sharp violence that startled the [illegible] from her equanimity.

"Mercy on us! is my lady in a fit, I wonder?" she exclaimed, as she ran up stairs to her mistress' room.

But the lady was neither in her bed chamber nor the dressing room that opened from it. And Maria did not for a moment or two perceive her mistress' white, rigid figure standing in the doorway of Sir Henry's apartment.

"Girl, where is your master?" she said, as if her tongue clove to her lips.

"He's gone out for a ride, my lady. Is not your ladyship well?" replied the maid in consternation at her mistress' wild look.

"Alone?" was the next word, spoken in a despairing, questioning tone, that gave the sharp-witted Abigail a key to the situation.

"No, ma'am, Miss Tyrrell went with him. It's only a ride, and I daresay they'll be back before so very long. It's an hour since they went, my lady."

"Did they take any of the grooms?"

"Yes, my lady. John went, but he came back for something or other a little while after. I am not sure whether he set off again to meet them or not, my lady; but I can go and see, if your ladyship pleases."

"Go," said the lady, mechanically, but the inclination of the head was more than the scarcely pronounced word, and Maria flew from the room, entertaining perhaps a slight sympathy with the ideas conjured up in the wretched Ida's brain.

To Lady Greville's frenzied impatience it seemed an age ere she returned. When at length she slowly re-entered the apartment her face was as pale and mysterious as a spectre.

"If you please, my lady, I am afraid something has happened, for the Duke of St. Maur is here, and he says he must see your ladyship. Shall I take him to the morning room, my lady?"

Lady Greville crushed up in her hand the paper she held, as if she could find some relief in the annihilation of the senseless document.

"Yes," was the sole word that passed her lips.

Maria silently threw a large lace cloak over her lady's carelessly arranged apparel, and led the way down the staircase to the apartment in question. Ida's keen eyes fixed themselves eagerly on the face of her guest, and a faint cry escaped her. Clinton St. Maur was colorless as a corpse.

* * * * * * * *

It was a breezy, glorious morning when Sir Henry and Rosalind started on their ride.

And both were silent for some moments in engrossing enjoyment of the soothing relief to mental cares and distress that previded by the exhilarating canter in which they were engaged. On they went for perhaps a mile, still in silent contemplation from Sir Henry roused his companion from her abstraction.

"Good heavens! I have brought with me a letter which should be sent off this morning. It will be too late when we return. Miss Tyrell, you will not be afraid to be left alone with me if I send back John to the embassy with it?"

The girl smiled incredulously.

"Surely you cannot imagine such folly?" she asked. "I am accustomed to ride alone, and never dreamt of any alarm."

Sir Henry smiled half sadly at his young charge's assonishment at the man rode off on his mission.

"You are too young and innocent to comprehend that there might be greater dangers than being alone, Miss Tyrell. And though—hark heaven—I can hold up my head in utter innocence, I may confess that I might not have been utterly free from danger where you are concerned."

The girl's beautiful eyes turned deprecatingly upon him.

"Sir Henry, please remember that I am entirely at the disposal of Lady Greville, and under her protection. I cannot believe that you could attach any idea to me save that I am a helpless dependent."

"Pardon me," he said, calmly, "I cannot admit for an instant that you and helpless dependence have anything in common. So far from that, I consider that it is a privilege and an honor to possess you as a guest. But, Rosalind, it is a dangerous pleasure for any man who is able to appreciate you as you deserve."

"Nay, do not shrink away," he added, sadly; "I shall not say one word that could offend your pure ears. I only tell you the truth as I look on you as one of the most gifted of your sex, and had it no chance that I were free to love—free to woo—I would have left no effort untried to win you. You have more in sympathy with me than Ida, pretty and attractive as she is. The man who is happy enough to gain your love will be exalted by the nobility of your nature, and rise with the very force of your elevation. As for me, I can but honor and desire to serve you, Rosalind, in all purity and innocence as your true friend."

Tears were flowing down the girl's cheeks now. There was something so sad and yet so noble in the whole tone—such frank and subdued yet affectionate reverence—that she instinctively comprehended the struggle that was going on in that manly heart.

"I believe, and I thank you, Sir Henry," she said, softly.

"And trust me, Rosalind?"

"Yes, I trust you as I would a dear brother," she said, earnestly.

"Thanks, thanks; you prove your high souled nature by this utter absence of vanity and selfishness," he said. "I am not altogether unworthy of you, since each proof of the justice of my opinion of you only deepens my true reverence and jealousy for your purity and happiness. Rosalind, tell me as you would a brother, is there anyone you could—that you do feel might be happy enough to be your choice?"

Her plume was well nigh mingling with the silken mane of the Arab she rode as Sir Henry spoke. But yet a proud sense of the utter hopelessness of the only love she had ever felt came to her aid, and she raised her head and replied, calmly, as he finished:—

good piece [illegible] Henry, none!"

the Devil [illegible] involuntarily brightened as he spoke.

[illegible] question," he said, "but it did occur to me when I witnessed your agitation and Lord Dudley's anxiety last night that there might be some idea of love between you."

"Never, under any possible circumstances, could I dream of such absurd folly!" she returned, impatiently.

"Thank Heaven, I did you but justice!" he returned. "I know him to be unworthy of you, Rosalind, and I hope you felt instinctively that he could not sympathize in your thoughts and feelings. Ah, I am not quite selfish," he added, "for I can truly say I would give half my fortune to see you fitly mated—ay, more fitly perhaps than you could have been with my unworthy self."

"I wish for nothing—nothing but peace, if I could but gain it," she returned half impatiently, switching unconsciously her half-bred Arab with her light riding-whip.

It made him start, and through him the powerful horse that her companion rode.

Sir Henry hastily pulled the rein to draw the animal from the side of the road to which he seemed resolved to go, where there were some low, overhanging trees. But the creature was too determined to be easily turned, and the sudden rush that he made to the thick hedge he resolved to approach, carried his rider under the low branches of a strong, overhanging tree.

The next instant one of the heavy boughs caught his cap, and, inflicting a sharp wound on his head, carried him off his saddle as the horse rushed on, and, in the twinkling of an eye, the baronet lay prostrate on the earth. He neither moved nor spoke in answer to Rosalind's earnest inquiries, and the girl sprang from her horse, and in a moment was kneeling beside him on the turf. He was insensible. Thus much and no more she could gather from the cold rigidity of his muscles, but not a spot of blood stained either his dress or the turf.

[illegible] conclude. One of the limbs must be the injured part. [illegible] now the absence of the man whom she could [illegible] for help. She dared not leave him alone, in the event of returning consciousness, and all that remained for her was to call loudly for some assistance, though the lonely stillness of all around gave scant hope of its arrival.

At length the sound of horses' feet gave her some hope. Nearer and nearer it came. As it approached she could perceive that there were two horsemen from the irregular step of the hoofs, and the momentary idea that it might be the returning groom vanished. But at least some human being was close to aid her, and she turned to the sufferer to attempt once more a cheering announcement, and bent over him in tender anxiety, the horsemen came in sight, and hastened their pace at the evidence of the confretemps that had taken place.

"Miss Tyrell! Is it you? What has happened?" came on Rosalind's ears in accents that she never heard unmoved.

Clinton St. Maur sprang from his horse and stood beside her with a coldly scrutinizing and suspicious gaze.

'Sir Henry has had an accident. Will you get help?" she replied, quickly.

"My companion is luckily a physician. Perhaps you will kindly examine Sir Henry's injuries, Doctor Moore," he said, turning to the other horseman.

The doctor instantly approached and proceeded to examine the sufferer.

"Can you manage to move this arm while the duke and I raise the body?" he said to Rosalind, who knelt white and calm by the patient.

She obeyed in silence. Gently and skilfully she freed the limb from the twisted and dangerous position in which it had fallen, and without screams or fainting assisted with her delicate woman's fingers in removing the coat-sleeve and shirt from the bruised and shattered member. Doctor Moore gave no sign of two although glanced as if to test her fortitude as he went on, and a look of quiet satisfaction came over his features as he marked her unflinching self-control.

"Your grace had better ride off in search of a stretcher of some kind," he said. 'This young lady is quite equal to give any assistance I may need in your absence."

With a bow the duke rode off. Meanwhile Doctor Moore pursued his task. He bared [illegible] together the arm, which was in truth a sickening spectacle with its crushed bruises, and he tasked Rosalind's firmness by entrusting her with the duty of bathing it with some water he found in an adjoining pool, and wrapping it in her handkerchief and his own, torn in bandages as they best might.

"You have surely been a soldier's daughter, young lady," he said. "I never saw a woman display such calm and sensible powers so young as yourself."

"No. I cannot boast of anything so distinguished," she said, with a sad smile.

Even as she spoke the remembrance of the kindly and respectful words spoken by the suffering patient but a brief space before brought the tears to her eyes, and she hastily turned to conceal them from the physician's eyes, but only to encounter the less kindly and indulgent survey of Clinton St. Maur.

He had just returned, after being so lucky as to find some laborers who were at work on some outbuildings in an adjacent farm, and they at once brought a large plank covered with a mattress from the house, on which Sir Henry was placed with kindly care, and the slow and sad procession began.

"Perhaps we had better take him home at once?" said the duke, inquiringly.

"Certainly not; it might cost him his life. Let him be taken to the very nearest shelter. Can any one speak German, by the way? For I believe it will be a great chance that any other language would be understood by the cottagers."

"I daresay I can make myself understood," said Rosalind, in a low tone. Dr. Moore gave her an approving nod at the response. The dwelling to which they wended their way was some quarter of a mile nearer than the farmhouse from which the duke had obtained help, and when they came in sight Rosalind was despatched to make the best terms she could for the charge. Clinton followed her with a strange fascination, albeit he told himself that it was merely to ensure a reception for his friend by the power of masculine influence and promises of gold. But he was more occupied, it must be confessed, by the sweet tones in which the harsh language was so fluently spoken, and the influence which the girl's gentle pleading seemed to exercise, than the task he had proposed to himself. It was even at that moment a simple marvel to him how that obscure maiden could be so accomplished and so varied in her gifts.

"Yes, they will do what they can," she said, "and at least Sir Henry will be quiet, for there is but a widow and her daughter in the cottage."

The still scarcely conscious patient was borne into the dwelling and laid on the clean if humble bed, and Rosalind at length yielded to Dr. Moore's orders and sat down in the old-fashioned large chair and closed her eyes in welcome relief from their tension, while the unfortunate invalid was placed in bed and the final arrangements made for his establishment there.

"I will go and inform Lady Greville," volunteered the duke, "and probably return with her. In that case, it will not be necessary to tax Miss Tyrell's zeal any farther."

With an incomprehensible and bitter courtesy he bowed to the girl, and hastily rode from the spot.

"She is lost—lost to every better feeling," he thought, as he galloped toward the gay little town. "How different to my sweet little violet, in her innocence and modesty."

But even as the thought crossed his mind came an irritating echo.

Different! Yes. But who was the superior? That was the question that even the lover of Geraldine Darcy could not altogether solve.

* * * * * *

"Lady Greville, dear Lady Greville, I implore you not to give way so utterly. Remember that for his sake you must be calm. It will be cruel for him to open his eyes and not rest on you as the first object."

Ida started from the trance of agony in which she had sunk at the words, and a fierce gleam darted across her face as she sprang up and rang the bell.

"Maria, bring my hat and cloak, and order the carriage instantly. Quick—quick!" she groane', rather than spoke.

"Yes," she added bitterly, as the servant disappeared. "Even if he is guilty, she shall not triumph at his very bedside. No! no; I will nurse him back to life, if but to leave him forever."

"You think I am raving," she resumed, as Clinton strove to soothe her by some common-place phrase. "But it is not so. Still I do not blame him. He had ever been loving and good till that syren came with her wicked blandishments, and won him from me. Duke, it is perhaps to save him from deeper crime that this has happened."

"Look here!"

And she displayed to Clinton's dark, disapproving gaze a slip of paper, on which were the words, written hurriedly by Rosalind, in her dainty, elegant hand:—

"I will accompany you with pleasure.—ROSALIND."

"Can anything be more convincing?" she added, her passion blinding as one saw her companion's sympathy. "I found that on his dressing-room floor. No doubt it had fallen in his guilty haste—and I—yes, I have the words burnt into my brain."

"Dear Lady Greville, be comforted. Trust me that this is a momentary infatuation—if indeed it exists at all on your husband's part. Miss Tyrell is gifted in no common degree, but, alas! those gifts are turned to evil, and a man like Sir Henry will turn to his pure and innocent wife with even warmer love from the contrast."

"Perhaps—perhaps," she exclaimed, impatiently. "But is she not to go and chase her from his side. I cannot endure thinking of it!" she exclaimed, stamping her feet impatiently.

The duke but too keenly sympathised with her irritation and in eagerness to be able to calm their fever, the carriage was got ready in an incredibly brief time, and the pair sprang in and were driven off at a pace which, as rapidly as human transition could go, brought them to the cottage.

"Look, look!" said Lady Greville, clinging to the duke's arm and gazing through the half-open door. "Is it to be borne?"

Rosalind was standing by the wounded man's bedside, bathing his brow with some simple essence in the possession of the cottagers, and ever and anon stooping down to listen whether the respiration was becoming more regular and strong. To the jealous eye that watched her there was the very tenderness of anxious love in her look and attitude, and the next moment Ida had sprung—rather than walked—into the apartment.

"Miss Tyrell, be so kind as to leave this gentleman at once," she said, in tones of suppressed rage. "What right have you to dare to usurp my place?"

"I have neither right nor wish, Lady Greville," said the girl, with a calm dignity that contrasted strangely with the lady's frantic desperation, "to take a place that is so dear to you and to him. Please Heaven it will be long, long yours."

"Hypocrite!" hissed the frenzied wife, "how dare you add such black deceit to your crime? Not another word. Go and repent. I have proofs of your wickedness too miserable to endure the pollution of your presence."

Rosalind looked at her rather in sorrow than in anger.

"Lady Greville, I can forgive you, for you must be most wretched even to harbor such unjust thoughts. I am innocent as yourself. In mercy to your own peace and to him"—she pointed to the prostrate form of the insensible man—"to him, I say, dismiss such miserable slanders from your heart."

"Girl, it is no slander; my own eyes, my own ears have discovered the wretched truth. Your own handwriting, your words and looks, your eager refuge with the too credulous victim, have spoken but too plainly. If you have any shadow of gratitude, any sense of shame left in you, spare me farther outrage at such a moment."

The softened wife knelt down by her senseless husband and burst into an agony of tears.

"Miss Tyrell, Lady Greville is right. It is due to her that her wishes should be respected. I entreat you to leave this room at once," said the duke, sternly. "The carriage is waiting. It can conduct you back to the home from which you have so unfortunately and recently departed."

Rosalind seemed to gather pride and strength from the bitterness of his tone, as if it was a tonic to her crushed spirit.

"Not to the 'home,' as your grace calls it, from which I set off this morning in utter unconsciousness and innocence," she said, proudly. "I will never return there now. I daresay I can make myself understood," said Rosalind, in a low tone. Dr. Moore gave her an approving nod at the response. The dwelling to which they wended their way was some quarter of a mile nearer than the farmhouse from which the duke had obtained help, and when they came in sight Rosalind was despatched to make the best terms she could for the charge. "Lady Greville, dear Lady Greville, I implore you not to give way so utterly. Remember that for his sake you must be calm. It will be cruel for him to open his eyes and not rest on you as the first object."

Ida started from the trance of agony in which she had sunk at the words, and a fierce gleam darted across her face as she sprang up and rang the bell.

"Can anything be more convincing?" she added, her passion blinding as one saw her companion's sympathy. "I found that on his dressing-room floor. No doubt it had fallen in his guilty haste—and I—yes, I have the words burnt into my brain."

From the cottage where the unhappy sufferer lay Rosalind Tyrell fled in a desperation of purpose that for the moment swallowed up every thought, every fear save of being arrested in her progress. If she could but hide herself from every cruel eye, shut her eyes and ears from the bitter looks and the sharp slander that were crushing her very spirit, she could then lie down in the dull peace of solitude and despair, and enjoy at least the negative comfort of freedom from the acute torture that was searing her very brain. The injustice of the jealous Ida might in time be pardoned and explained, and in a measure furnished an excuse and gave a key to much that had puzzled her—but Clinton St. Maur! Why should he thus pursue her to the very death, crush her to the dust, judge her by the very harshest rule, and turn from her as a loathed and guilty thing?

Poor Rosalind. She recalled that memorable day when he had clasped her to his heart, whispered words of approving tenderness, shielded her from every pang that his strong arms and steady care could avert, and bent over her with looks that she had rather felt than seen. And now, what had she done to merit such unrelenting harshness, such severe judgment of her every action, such pitiless hate?

Poor girl. She did not sufficiently understand the contrarieties of human nature to trace out the workings of the contending passions that influenced the betrothed suitor of Geraldine Darcy. She rushed on as swiftly as her heavy riding habit would permit, all unmindful of the direction she was taking or the extreme exhaustion of her frame, when she was suddenly accosted by a voice that was associated with the most painful moments of her life, the voice of Dudley Vyvian.

"Miss Tyrell! Rosalind! whither are you going in such frantic haste? What has happened?"

He placed himself full in her path, and his hand he daringly laid on her arm, so that she could not free herself without actual violence.

The sudden contact recalled her energies in an instant.

"Unhand me, my lord," she said, drawing up her figure with a haughty recoil. "You have no right to detain or to question me; nor will I even answer you till you free me from your insolent grasp."

"Why will you drive me to appear so cruel, Rosalind?" he replied, removing his hand, but maintaining his position in front so as to obstruct every possibility of progress. "I know but too well the slanders and the miseries that are overwhelming you, the envious jealousies that your beauty and attractions have raised, the love which is driving its object to destruction. I am well nigh frantic with impotent anger and distress for one so dear and worshipped. Rosalind, seek refuge with me. Offer you what no one else can give—a home and honorable peace, love, wealth, with all that they can procure. Can you refuse?—can you scorn what the highest would not consider beneath their acceptance?"

The girl stood with a proud, statue like calmness while he uttered these words. She did not even vouchsafe the acknowledgment of a look or gesture of emotion during his earnest and passionate speech.

"Have you finished, my lord?" she said, when he ceased. "If so, perhaps you will permit me to pass on. This is not the only time that you have used these arguments. I can but repeat that no possible circumstances, now and for ever, could induce me to give any other answer than I did when you first introduced the subject."

"But I will not accept it," he said, impetuously. "You cannot realize your position. Destitute and disgraced, in a foreign land, and with no friends or acquaintances save those who will prejudge your conduct, nothing but misery can await you. I must—I will save you from yourself."

Again he seized her hand, and strove to draw it through his arm.

"My lord, this is unmanly," she said, snatching away her hand, though the delicate flesh was deeply bruised by the strength of his grasp. "If I am thus forlorn and helpless I more than suspect that much of my present extremity may be attributed to your base plottings. I despise you far more than I do the veriest vagrant that has—like myself—no shelter for his head. I tell you I would rather lie down under yonder tree and wait for death's kindly aid than bear a name which you have degraded, or perjure myself by the false vows you would have me take. Go, my lord, or I will see whether there is not help within reach."

Still Lord Dudley lingered. She looked so beautiful in her haughty indignation, so much more like a princess than the obscure daughter of the huntsman, that he felt more determined than ever to make her his own in spite of her repugnance.

"Forgive me, Rosalind," he said, at length, with a total change of manner. "I will not press you farther in your present excitement, though I tell you from my heart that my feelings can never change while life lasts. To prove my sincerity, at least, permit me to relieve you from your present painful extremity. There is a respectable widow of an English surgeon, in whose house I once lodged myself, living not far from here. She would receive you on my recommendation, and I will take care she shall not lose by any kindness she may show to you. Will you let me take you to her?"

The girl hesitated for a moment. The obscure light of a winter's day was rapidly darkening, and it was a chilling prospect to be alone in that strange and lone spot in the long, bitter night. Yet, better that than place herself in Lor l Dudley's power; and the shiver passed away with the strong fervor of her noble faith and self respect.

"I thank you, my lord, but I had rather arrange my own plans for the future. I can work—the last thing I have to fear is want of bread," she said, slowly and sadly, for the excitement of the last few hours was rapidly telling on her exhausted frame.

She moved a few steps to pass her unwelcome companion, but in spite of herself her limbs tottered and she reeled against a tall tree, which luckily stood in the wayside, for her support.

"This is madness!" exclaimed the young man, in actual frenzy at the sight. "Rosalind, in mercy to yourself, if not to me, come with me! I swear to you I will not molest you till you are again able to think and act more calmly. But I cannot leave you to perish."

"Go, go!" she murmured, a vague distrust of his good faith still haunting her failing senses.

But just as her strength was completely forsaking her, though her brave spirit was strong as ever, and her gesture waived Lord Dudley from her, even when she could not trust her voice to speak, the sound of carriage wheels was heard, and the young nobleman instinctively drew back from his close contact with the fainting girl.

The approaching vehicle proved to be an English-looking, open, light phaeton, with two equally unmistakeable British bred horses, and a yet more unquestionable John Bull coachman.

"Ha! my little heroine. Why, what on earth is all this? What brings you here, and in this state?"

Doctor Moore, whose quick eye had in a moment caught sight of Rosalind's features, on which the light through the open boughs shone, leaped from his carriage, and, hastily placing his arm around the pale girl's form, drew her towards the vehicle.

"I was trying to induce Miss Tyrell to accept my escort to some shelter," said Lord Dudley, stepping forward as he perceived Doctor Moore's sharp look round the spot, "but it will be far better for her to be conveyed in your carriage, doctor. She was quite unnerved and exhausted when I accidentally encountered her here."

The physician gave a keen glance from one to the other of the pair; he perceived Rosalind's yet closer clinging to his support as Lord Dudley spoke, and perhaps was not altogether wide of the truth in his deductions.

"I will take charge of her at any rate, my lord; and as she evidently needs what you certainly could not give, professional care and total repose, you will not feel piqued at the preference of an old man to a young one as her guardian. Come, my dear, I will take you to your home before I pay another visit," he said, turning kindly to his newly assumed charge.

"No, no; I have none," she murmured, as he almost lifted her into the carriage, and with a low bow to the discomfited Vyvian, drove off in the direction of Brussels; "none but the grave," she added, rather to herself than her companion.

"I thought you were under Lady Greville's protection?" said the doctor, in some surprise. "I have surely always seen you with her ever since her return from England."

"Yes, but not now, not now," she said, sadly, her composure returning as the sense of safety and kindness revived her courage.

"Why not?" exclaimed the physician, sharply. "What have you done to forfeit this patronage?"

Rosalind's feelings warmed at the supposed reproach, and her eyes regained some of their usual light, as she replied:—

"If you doubt me, Doctor Moore, leave me to perish on the roadside. I will not deceive you. It is simply impossible for me to explain to you the truth. Lady Greville suspects, condemns me, withdraws from me her protection as a guilty thing. I can not, and will not, vindicate myself in her eyes, nor yours, my kind friend."

The doctor surveyed her with an earnest gaze as she spoke. He was no bad judge of human nature, when for thirty years all kinds of characters, all descriptions of rank had passed before him; and so formed his own opinion of the fair girl by his side, whatever he might be disposed to confide to the world at large.

"Miss Tyrell, I am neither a young lover nor a stern judge; I give no verdict in your case. You may be deserving of Lady Greville's censure, though I believe you to be by no means an ordinary woman. You have courage and coolness. Are you inclined to earn your living?"

"Gladly, thankfully—at whatever labor or cost," she replied.

"Can you undertake the care of a lady of weak mind and health, as a companion and friend, one who will do all that a well educated girl can effect to cheer and comfort one so afflicted?"

"It will be but too congenial an employment. My own heart is too sick not to sympathize with others," replied the girl.

"Then I can place you in a perfectly safe position," he said, drily. "If I am not mistaken, one of your crimes is being too attractive. In the position I offer to you there is no risk of its being any danger to yourself or others. To an invalid beauty and grace represent only goodness and sympathy; and there will be no flattery in your winning the affection of an afflicted and depressed woman."

"I care not what I do so that I can lawfully earn my livelihood," said the girl, passionately. "Doctor Moore, it will be for you to decide in what manner my duty is fulfilled. I ask no favor at your hands. I merely implore the opportunity of obtaining the labor—not indulgence or charity."

The doctor smiled, but with no contemptuous cynicism in his expression.

"You are proud, Miss Tyrell; some would say unduly so; but where justified I do not object to a degree of self-assertion. Well, I will meet you on your own ground, and you must stand or fall on your own merits, since you challenged a trial of them; only do not complain should you be tried somewhat severely."

The girl bowed her head with an involuntary and high-bred grace that again brought a mingling of amusement and surprise to Doctor Moore's lips, but he made no further comment, and went on in a business-like tone to the next point in discussion.

"It is but fair you should have some idea of the duties you will have to perform, Miss Tyrell. The lady for whom I am about to secure your services has every good gift that Providence can bestow, save the one that alone can make them of any value—I mean mental and physical health. Lady Darcy, is, I fear, a confirmed invalid."

"Darcy?" repeated Rosalind, eagerly.

"Yes, that is her name. Do you know anything of her?" said Doctor Moore, in surprise.

"I have heard the name. I once saw Sir Ralph Darcy, but never spoke to him," returned the girl, recovering herself.

The physician went on:—

"The poor lady has conceived one of those strange aversions to her husband which we so often meet with in these afflicted ones, and he has wisely removed her entirely from old associations and placed her with me, together with her maid. I have a tolerably large carte blanche given me for any expenditure which may be necessary, and it has more than once occurred to me that it would be advantageous for Lady Darcy to have some companion who is more calculated to amuse her, and without unpleasant associations connected with her presence, than the woman who attends her. So your pride may quite sleep, young lady. You are only making a trial of a post already provided, and your fitness for it rests with yourself. In any case you cannot very well get into mischief.

This was brusque speaking, but Rosalind needed some bitterness in the tonic for her morbid sensitiveness at the instant, and she was more healthily roused by it than the utmost tenderness could have effected.

"I shall do my best," she said, calmly.

"That will be sufficient. What I require is simple in description, though perhaps more difficult in execution. I want you to win this poor lady's confidence and do all in your power to divert her thoughts. If you can accomplish this you shall have no reason to complain of your reward."

As Doctor Moore concluded his sentence the carriage drove through a large gateway, conducting into very extensive and well laid out grounds, and in a few more minutes they reached a spacious mansion, consisting of a substantial centre and two rather elaborate and elegantly devised wings.

"Conduct this young lady to a chamber; give her every necessary for refreshment," he said to a respectable woman who appeared in the hall as they entered, "and let dinner be served as soon as she is ready."

The domestic did not express any surprise either by word or look, and Rosalind, with some curiosity, followed her up a staircase to a corridor, from which several apartments opened. She threw open the door of one of these—a well-furnished but gloomy looking room.

"I will send you warm water, mademoiselle," she said, in French. "Shall you require any toilet requisites till your baggage arrives?"

Rosalind could have laughed outright had her heart been less heavy. The contrast was so remarkable between the Belgian femme de chambre and an English chambermaid, and the real state of the case was so ludicrously unlike what the woman's words implied.

"I should be thankful to get rid of this heavy dress," she said, languidly, glancing at her habit. "It makes me feel so faint and weary, but I have none other to wear at present."

"Ah, I understand. Mademoiselle's trunks are on the road. They are inexportiable, those porters! But stay—I think I can manage. Attendez un instant."

The woman rapidly disappeared from the room, leaving Rosalind in a bewildered mystification in the novel scene where she had so suddenly found herself. It was so like a dream. Twenty-four hours before she had been the indulged and confidential favorite of the capricious Ida, adopted in her family, and extolled among her guests as a beloved sister. Now she was a disgraced exile, a hired menial, and the brilliant household shadowed over by the darkness of overhanging death. It was sufficient to cloud the senses and dazzle the perceptions of the strongest. Rosalind threw herself on one of the large easy chairs placed near the table, and passed her hand over her brow to clear away the aching mist that obscured her mental rather than her physical vision. But ere she had time to calm one such tumultuous swimming the door again opened, and her attendant appeared, holding up triumphantly a trained and ample black silk robe.

"Mademoiselle," she observed, in exultation, "Here is a beautiful dress, which I can tell in a minute will just fit mademoiselle. I knew Mrs. Marston had a quantity of such robes, which will never be worn more. At any rate, it will do till mademoiselle's own clothes shall arrive."

Rosalind felt an extreme repugnance to this summary appropriation of another's property, and felt induced to demand were this Mrs. Marston might be. But, concluding very naturally that she must be Dr. Moore's housekeeper, and that possibly the robes in question were the wardrobe of a deceased wife, her only hesitation consisted in a reluctance to appear before the bereaved husband in such guise. Still the stains of dust and blood on her habit, the weary heat with which it fevered her frame, and the unostentatious modesty of the color of the dress combined to satisfy her scruples.

So, after a few minutes' pause, she began her toilet, and, refreshing her head with copious ablutions of water, and arranging her abundant hair in the most quiet and simple fashion, she arrayed herself in the rich silk and lace which were attached to the robe.

"Well, you do look well in it, that you do," observed Manette, exultingly, "and my master will be pleased. I hope, with my management. Will you come down now, miss? Dinner must not wait, or he will be angry."

TO BE CONTINUED.

A CAUTIOUS WITNESS.—A witness examined in one of the courts of Illinois, upon a trial concerning a horse trade, was asked by the counsel for the defendant how the plaintiff generally rode. "He pretty generally rides astraddle, sir," replied the witness. "How does he ride in company?" "If he has a good horse he always keeps up." "And how does he ride when he is alone?" "Really, sir, I cannot say, as I never was in his company when he rode by himself." "You may stand aside, sir."

WEIGHTY.—Washington Irving once said of a pompous American diplomatist:—"Ah! he is a great man, and in his own estimation a very great man—a man of great weight. When he goes to the west the east tips up."

WITHOUT.—WITHIN.

A CONTRAST.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY WALDORF H. PHILLIPS.

Without, the snow is falling thick and fast,
Covering the earth in spotless white;
A fierce, bitter storm, and a wintry blast—
Within, the fire on the hearth burns bright.
Darkness without, and cold, and sin;
Light, and warmth, and pleasure within.

Without, a woman is walking the streets,
Smiling and talking to whoever she meets;
Never mind the fierce throbbing of her head,
Smile and talk she must, for she must have bread.
Within, a woman gone whirling around,
In the maze of the dance to music's sound.

Without, a man totters shivering by,
With pale, frozen cheek and deep sunken eye;
Within, a man is joyfully smiling,
And the long hours he pleasantly whiling.
Coldness without, and darkness, and sin,
Warmth, and happiness, and wealth within!

CLOWN.—I. Yes. Robert Butler, the clown, did play an engagement recently at the Union Square Theatre, under the name of R. M. Butcher. 2. John Brougham, on Nov. 18th, 1856, performed in the "Stage Struck Irishman" at the Old Bowery Theatre, N. Y., and left immediately after the termination of that performance for Philadelphia, Pa., where, on the same evening, at the National Theatre, he acted Powhatan in the burlesque of "Pocahontas," commencing at 10:20 o'clock P. M.

A CHESTER MAN.—1. Caller Ou never won the Derby; she won the St. Leger in 1851. 2. The Chester Course is not considered the best in England by any means. It is an excellent one for affording a good view for the spectators, but in other respects is not equal to many others. 3. Kitchener weighed 40 pounds when he rode Red Deer.

C. L., Philadelphia.—The population of the nine largest cities in the United States, in the aggregate, amounted to 5,533,920 at the taking of the last census in 1870, and London, Eng., to 3,320,700, or 213,900 less than said nine cities. In area the cities would, of course, be much larger than London.

CIRCUITARY.—The late actor named T. B. Douglass, who played many business for many years in the west, who died in the south during the war. There is another actor of the same name who played heavy business at New Orleans some few years since, where he now resides. A letter will reach him in care of this office.

CONSTANT READER, Albany, Ga.—1. We should hardly think they would prove attractive. 2. The cost of a side show privilege with a circus is a matter of private bargain. 3. The cost of opening a saloon would depend entirely on their size, the number of figures, &c.

NEVADA, Virginia City.—Is ought to have objected to the manner of dealing before the trump card was turned; but to do it afterwards. It was consequently not a misdeal, provided each player held six cards. 2. A misdeal at seven up is in the wrong number of cards dealt, not in the mode of dealing them.

YONKERS.—The steamer for a spin was the Mary Powell. 41. North river, on the 18th and 30th of each month, except when those dates fall on Sunday; then the day previous. For full particulars apply to F. B. Baby, agent, at the company's office, foot of Canal street, this city.

F. D., Cincinnati.—1. Only the player taking up, making or ordering up the trump card, can go alone; there cannot be two lone hands played at the same time. 2. The party who goes alone and makes three points scores two points. 3. If your partner orders you up you cannot play it alone.

F. F. T., Stamford, Conn.—Pete Maguire and Tommy Chandler fought at Lakeville, Cal., Jan. 17th, 1856. They fought 69 rounds, when darkness came on and they were ordered to meet the next day and finish it; but Maguire failed to attend, and Chandler, who was present, was awarded the stakes.

J. H.—The son of a U. S. minister at the Court of St. James, England, if born there, would be eligible as a candidate for the U. S. Presidency, as he would be considered as having been born under the U. S. flag.

SUB. MARSHALDILLE, Ga.—1. Dan Rice was never a member of congress nor an officer in the U. S. army. 2. We have nothing to do with politics. 3. See answer to No. 1. 4. He erected a soldiers' monument at Girard, Pa.

W. G. (—): A, who bet that B did not throw 10, loses the money. Throwing in means that number or over. 2. B wins, for the intent of the bet was that he, B, could not put two balls in or through the target.

T. S., Detroit.—1. In playing casino there is a three spot on the board. Can you build on it with another three spot, calling it six, or must you take it up with a three? 2. Can you build on an opponent's pile that he has already built?.....1. Yes. 2. Yes.

A. S. Marshall, Mich.—1. Your opponent, to take both his own and yours, must build with the ten spot he holds. 2. You cannot build for your partner; each player must build out of his own hand.

CONSTANT READER, Scranton, Pa.—Tom Allen did not fight a novice since he was beaten by Mace. He defeated James C. Gallagher, Nov. 8th, 1870, but Gallagher had previously beaten Geo. Carey and Owen Mechin.

R. T. AND A. R. G., Holden, Mo.—The fastest passage, by steamer, from New York to Queenstown, is 7 days, 20 hours and 10 minutes, by the City of Brussels, Inman line. Queenstown to New York, 8 days, 4 hours and 38 minutes.

H. A. C., Copake, N. Y.—1. It is a useless innovation on the regular game and we don't decide questions upon it. 2. Wm. B. Curtis is said to have lifted 3,300lbs., with harness; 1,230 without the aid of straps, by the hat.

CONSTANT READER, Providence, R. I.—A city in England is a borough to sue corporate, in which a bishop resides, or the capital of his see. Liverpool is called a town there.

SUBSCRIBER.—In the following raffle, three aces beat two sixes and a five, but not beating by three deuces, loses being the lowest numbers. In highest throw, three aces only count three.

A. M. S., Milwaukee, Wis.—Manuscript parts copied from a written book or publication should be paid for by counting the MSS lines and not the printed ones.

GASTON.—1. The license for all shows varies in each town. 2. Apply to the manager or a circus or to the head of the various departments. Such a team as yours is not known to Spalding & Rogers.

DRIVER, Manchester, N. H.—Timing horses trotting on the ice is a difficult matter, and can only be done by the aid of flags and good judges.

OLD MAN, Shreveport, La.—He can run all the bases on the third bed ball, but runs the risk of being put out in so running at every other base save the one given him. He runs as his option.

J. T., New Orleans.—1. No. 2. No. 3. No great casino two; in little casino, one. 4. He is first class in headwork, and a most humanly valuable pitcher. 6. Cannot say, as they are not all arranged.

A. B. CARD D., Lancaster, O.—B can play his eight on the pile so soon as he sees the ace with the eight he holds on his mate's play; but A can only play his eight on the board.

J. C. N., Bucyrus.—Each player must build for himself and not for his partner. B, therefore, cannot build a ten unless he holds a ten in hand to take it with.

SUBSCRIBER, Phila.—The action of the judge was wrong, but the only remedy the loser has, is never to shoot again where he is allowed to officiate in that capacity.

MIKE, Boston.—A full hand beats a straight flush, which only occurs in stud poker, unless a special agreement otherwise has been made.

OLD HOUSE, Detroit.—A card exposed by the dealer at poker in dealing the hands cannot be taken by the player for whom it was intended, but must be placed at the bottom of the pack.

JACK FRENCH.—Religious evening services were held at the old National Theatre, in Chatham square, at the close of 1858 and beginning of 1859.

TREADWELL, J. B.—1. As it was never stated, to our knowledge, we cannot inform you. 2. Will inquire when we see the party mentioned.

SUBSCRIBER, New Orleans.—We do not know any person bearing that name. Johnny was in prison at San Francisco, Cal., at last accounts, charged with murder. Thank you for your well wishes.

FAIR PLAY, Norwalk.—1. The item is too stale for the CLIPPER. 2. We do not wish to print any Pabst amusement correspondents, and we do not require one in your town.

G. S. W., Macon.—Dexter's fastest mile time to wagon, on record, is 2:24. He trotted faster in a private trial, but such do not go on the record.

GOODELL, Sumpter, S. C.—The name of the person who was part owner of Dexter, and was shot by a woman in Chicago, was George Trussell.

NANO, Binghamton.—Outside bets are not play or pay, even although the event in question on which they were made was play or pay.

C. L. S., Newark, N. J.—1. This is Gov. Hoffman's second term. 2. General Butler never trotted 20 miles in an hour. 3. The civil list of the Queen of England is about a million sterling.

C. M. S., Portland, Me.—You must change his diet entirely, giving no meat, wash him every other day with carbolis soap over the back, and put a canor collar on to save a week.

F. D., Phila.—The fastest bricklaying of which we have any record was 709 bricks in 12 minutes, by Wade D. Corsens, at Farley's Market, in your city.

J. W. S., Meredith Hollow, N. Y.—One dollar and a quarter only received.

ESCRIBER, Jacksonville, Ill.—Ed. James, who advertises, can send you a short hand for fifty cents.

SWEDENBORG.—It being a misplay, at bagatelle, his opponent is entitled to the next shot.

G. H. F., Fair Haven, Conn.—Appy to any of the dramatic agencies advertised in the CLIPPER.

ENOCH, New Orleans, La.—The lady referred to is the wife of the gentleman in question.

C. B., Franklin, St. Point.—Tom Foley, it was said, would organize a nine for Chicago in 1873.

J. L. CARTER.—They will be published, but in what book we cannot say yet.

STAR AND KID, Phila.—A player can increase a pile of "six," but not of "nines."

RAVAPLAN, Providence, R. I.—We have not the French record to answer by.

J. H. W. AND J. R.—Your partner can order you to turn the trump card down and play it alone.

E. P. T., Saco.—"A poser, A bets $1, and B calls him. A gives B the money. Can B oblige A to show his hand?".....He can.

H. S., Chicago.—Your opponent is entitled to a run of three for his 3core, and a run of four for his ace, besides one point for the go.

T. B., Chetopo, Kansas.—B cannot play it alone after being ordered up by A.

R. H. W., Keokuk.—There being no recognized rules for such a game, you must make your own before commencing to play.

J. C. N., Bucyrus, O.—You cannot build for your partner. Each player must build out of his own hand.

J. W., Lockport.—Dexter trotted in 2:17¼ at Buffalo, August 16th, 1867.

M. M., Greenpoint, L. I.—A person can win by betting on a certainty, if there is no fraud.

H. B. S., Richmond, Va.—The CLIPPER is published on Tuesday morning of each week.

T. G. S., North Attleboro.—There are no recognized rules for the government of the game.

CAPTAIN S.—We have not the lady's biography, so cannot inform you.

R. NEWTITLES.—The population of New York city, at the taking of the census in 1870, was 926,341.

B. R. H.—Our time is too valuable to waste in solving such ridiculous problems.

JOHN TROTT, Boston.—The word "banquet" is pronounced as though spelled bank-wet.

C. F. Q., Chicago.—Solicit information from a wholesale agency in your city.

CHAS. E. L., Haverhill.—1. Almanac and time-table forwarded; it contains the desired information. 2. Nearly, if not all.

FRANK SHAW, Brooklyn.—It is requisite that you put up a deposit at this office before your challenge can be published in the CLIPPER.

ALBANY.—It is an advertisement. 2. The two red balls should be spotted, and B continue his play.

READER, Corry, Pa.—At euchre a player can order up his partner and go alone.

A. S., Baltimore.—About $2,000 would set him right.

AUCTION PITCH.—A went out first with his high, as by making high Jack, he was not set back.

JACK SHEAW.—Yes, if worth anything; but stock in hand is too great at present to invest.

A. F.—1. A tie does not beat; consequently A lost. 2. The first answers the second question.

THE ARSENAL, Pittsburgh.—1. The non dealer leads. 2. Get "American Hovle," published by Dick & Fitzgerald, New York

OKO. LEOPOLD.—We know nothing of the parties further than that they have advertised in the CLIPPER.

TYRO, Buffalo, N. Y.—Please send report of all places of amusements in your city.

CUNDERANGO, Middletown, Conn.—Your questions are too problematical for replies.

E. S., Boston, Mass.—Q. L. Fox is conceded to be the best pantomimist upon the American stage.

W. B., Covington, Ky.—A letter addressed to the lady in care of this office will reach her.

H. H.—The chances are limited. Better hold on to your money.

H. W. K.—1. Lead year commenced January 1st, 1872. 2. Yes.

ANDREW, Mottin, Pa.—The Thirty-fourth street theatre is closed.

G. H. F., Cincinnati.—Will probably be given in our next.

JANUARY.—We do not know for certain who are in the market.

READER, Brooklyn.—We cannot understand your question.

J. P. C., Lexington, Mo.—See answer to J. C. N., Bucyrus.

THOMAS HILL, Pemberton, N. J.—See last week's issue.

L. A. H., South Bend Ind.—Respectfully declined.

J. M.—There are no rules for such a foolish game.

CONSTITUTION.—Our previous answer was correct.

W. C., Keokuk, Iowa.—Respectfully declined.

A CONSTANT READER.—They did not fight at all.

A. B.—Don't know of him sufficiently to reply.

J. C. S., Selma, Ala.—Respectfully declined.

J. H. C.—You are "out" $45 and the hat.

A. B. C.—One dollar and fifty cents.

C. HALL.—Respectfully declined.

J. C. F.—We are not informed.

W. A. F.—Cannot say.

NOT "WELL UP."—A country exchange says that "a boy, while driving a load over a narrow bridge, fell from the load into a ravine ten feet below. Just as he reached the ground the horses and load fell upon him, but he was not killed." Had one of our city reporters been delegated to "get up" such an item, he would have killed that boy without the slightest remorse, and no one would have blamed him. We never let such chances slip.

A WOLF IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING.

J. S. Willis is the name of a man, a pastor some call him, who preaches for a stipulated salary in a Methodist church on Seventeenth street, this city. On Sabbath day, January 14th, this preacher delivered a discourse on the life and death of the late Jas. Fisk, Jr., in the course of which he made use of language more fit for a pot-house politician than for a minister of the gospel, charging the dead man with having been "a bully without prowess; a champion without a belt and without battle; with the melo-dramatic buffoonery of Falstaff; perverting law and society into a carnival of debauch, where he might glut his hellish lusts without hindrance or stint," and much more of the same sort. The divine Master of this pastor preached "peace on earth and good will to man;" it is greatly to be regretted that Mr. Willis has not thought it proper to follow such a pure and holy example, instead of, vampyre-like, violating the sanctity of the grave, rioting and revelling in the dainty feast which his natural appetite seems to crave, tearing the corpse asunder, sucking its blood, and scattering the festering remains around and about the banquet table of this so-called "eminent divine." If the brotherhood of preachers have no more charity than this pastor of the Seventeenth street church has, then the ministry is a snare, a deceit, and a damnable falsehood; but we have reason to know that the doctrines enunciated by this man, at such a time, do not find a response in the breasts of the ministry—his is an exceptional case, prepared for the occasion as a great sensation, just as our theatrical managers prepare a grand sensational show piece for the amusement of their patrons when the legitimate no longer serves to attract, or possesses sufficient interest to draw them from their comfortable firesides. Mr. Willis has by no means helped the cause of the church by his ill-timed and unholy assaults upon the dead; it would have been far better had he selected a live subject at which to hurl his venom; and if he wished "to point a moral," he need not have gone outside of his own profession for the skeleton and material of his discourse—vide the case of the Reverend Mr. Watson, now under sentence of death in England for the murder of his wife! Why seek to defame the memory of a dead man while such a subject as this Reverend Watson was ready at his hand for dissection? No, he would rather seek to hide the crimes and offences of those in his own calling, instead of, like an honest man, disclosing them to public view. He has feeling, and compassion, and forgiveness, probably, for the ministerial murderer, but none for the murdered; the feelings of the dead's family and friends even must be lacerated by the vampyre claws of this "wolf in sheep's clothing," in addition to his desecrating the grave of one whose voice can ne'er again be heard in his own defence. Is there no redress for such uncalled for assaults from the pulpit? Is not this man Willis amenable to the law as well as publishers of newspapers? Or is the pastor free from action for libel, just as the rich church he presides over is free from taxes? The Reverend Mr. Sabine committed an act of ministerial suicide when he refused to permit the corpse of an actor to be brought into his church for funeral services, but referred the friends of the deceased to that "little church around the corner," where the ceremonies were performed in the true spirit of Christianity and brotherly love. And so has this later Sabine, this vampyre Willis, committed a like suicide by his ruthless invasion of the grave, when living subjects without number would have afforded him abundant material for his text that "There is a way that seemeth right unto man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Let the Reverend resurrectionist apply the text to himself, and may he profit by the same.

JOHN C. HEENAN.—In last week's CLIPPER we announced the return of Mr. Heenan from Europe, where he was residing when the slander was sent over the cable connecting him with the voucher robbery, and stating that he had left the United States on that account. Without knowing any of the circumstances connected with the rumor, but from our personal, intimate knowledge of the upright character of the man, we defended Mr. Heenan from the attacks made upon him, and we have now the satisfaction of seeing the papers that assailed him, through information furnished by the Associated Press agent, retracting their slanders, and making suitable apologies. Mr. Heenan has never willfully wronged any man; a more honorable gentleman is seldom to be met with; he is poor, and his good character is all he has to assist him in making his way through the world. He has returned to New York for the purpose of seeking out the author of the villainous fabrication which connected his name with the voucher business, but has thus far only had the poor satisfaction of learning that it was, like many other false and slanderous charges, manufactured by some miserable Bohemian, and "written up" as a choice morsel to be scattered broadcast throughout the world by the agents of the Associated Press. The agent in this city offered to make every apology, and pay the expenses of Mr. Heenan's return, expressing his earnest regret for what had occurred, and promising to make as ample a retraction here and in Europe as had been the publicity given to the manufactured falsehood. We believe that the proper retraction was made in London some time ago—at least that is our impression; if it has not been made, proceedings will be instituted against Baron Reuter, of the European press agency. The good accomplished by the Associated Press' dissemination of this false and useless information has been to add to the number of Mr. Heenan's friends, and to make still stronger that friendship and esteem in which he is held by the thousands who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. It does not follow that a man is a rogue because he takes an active part in sporting matters; oh, no! the rogues of the present day are found among what are called the elite of society, among those holding high positions, and whose fortunes have been made by "official robbery" or "shrewd business operations," which honest people would call "swindling."

MERCY!—There is some good in man after all. It has just been disclosed that at one of our Broadway restaurants the oysters are chloroformed before being opened for their customers, in accordance with the laws of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. This is all very well, but the people have rights as well as oysters; and we therefore respectfully suggest that all merciful barkeepers should chloroform their customers before serving them with benzine, kerosene and other beverages.

GREAT HUNT.—Mr. Livingstone is somewhere in Africa hunting up the sources of the Nile. Sir Samuel Baker is chasing Livingstone, and the Herald expedition is on the trail of Baker. Between the three of them, something ought to turn up. Pity for the Grand Duke that he isn't out there to hunt after the Herald chaps.

OUR "UP RIVER" FRIENDS solemnly declare that a shad was recently caught near Albany. It is too early for first shad to be caught up north yet. This shad was no doubt a sturgeon, and our Albany friends have been imposed upon by some drunken miscreant of a reporter. Call it a sturgeon, and let it go at that.

WHITE HORSES, we are told, are not to be used in the French army in future, the color affording too prominent a mark for the shooters. The late war, we opine, developed rather too many life-like pictures of "Death on the Pale Horse."

A SARCASTIC WESTERN EDITOR spells the name of the President of the United States with a little "g." Either the sarcastic person doesn't know any better, or he must be still smaller than his small "g."

NEW JERSEY, we learn with pleasure, has established a reform school for her girls. Now let her establish another for her men, and then there will be some hope for her.

"OUR JIM" is a very impudent youth. He has just been the recipient of a very stylish meerschaum pipe, and now he says that every other meerschaum pipe is a mere sham.

WHY "BULLOCK" PRESSES are preferred to all others is because they "feed" better.

GOOD TIME BY FIREMEN.—Mr. Ed. M. Adams, of East Saginaw, Mich., having read the account recently published in the CLIPPER of the feat performed by Andrew Hites, of Wheeling, West Va., wishes us to state that in 1860 Billy Cochrane and Ed. Lee, both fast runners and prominent members of Taylor Hose Company, No. 1, of Buffalo, N. Y., (as the members of the good old 19 Hose, 9 Engine, 13 and 18 Truck, and Gus Thomas, of 19 and 40 Hose, well know) ran a wager of $1000, drew the company's "crab," weighing just six hundred pounds, from Bloomer's Hotel to Burt Scott's, a distance, as measured by the city surveyor, of a trifle over ten miles. The wager was that it could not be accomplished in 2¼ hours, and much money changed hands, the betting being 2 to 1 against the runners. The judges and betting men were in carriages, and accompanied the running party. They started at 12 M., and a good portion of the way was up hill, out and back. Cochrane Burns, one pushing and the other on the tongue, and the whole distance was accomplished in one hour and forty-five minutes, and they came in in good condition to do another ten miles at once. One mile and a half from town they met a large crowd, who walked out to have a run down with them, but as fate would have it, they hadn't the nerve, and when Billy and Ed. "let themselves out" there was none of the crowd to be found with them on their arrival at Bloomer's Hotel, the starting point.

SKATING.—The skating in and around the metropolis during the past week has been from fair to middling only. The only noteworthy occurrence was the visit of the experts of the Brooklyn Skating Club on Thursday to Prospect Park at the invitation of Mr. Madden. The delegation included the following members of the organization:—Wm. Jennings, Jr., F. X. Tuky, John T. Harvey, Robert Benton, Geo. Bettis, Ernest Wendt, John W. K. Oakley, Frank H. O'Connor, F. M. Johnson, Jr., Wm. Madden, J. Smith, Geo. Wells, A. Whitney, C. H. Brownlach, J. W. Peacher, Charles Gilderoad, F. F. Andrews, Charles Hilderbrand, F. F., James Sumner, A. C. Bannon, E. M. Brady, Henry Dollard. The weather was cold, but the ice was in fine condition, and a large crowd of onlookers around the portion of the outer lake set apart for the skating experts. Messrs. Brady, Dollard and Palm Johnson were the principal skaters of the party, and their evolutions were much admired. On Monday, Jan. 22d, the ball was up at Central Park and at the Brooklyn resorts.

AT THE AKRON, O., CITY RINK, Mr. G. A. Bluhm, of Chicago, who holds the medals for claiming him to be the champion skater of the north-west, gave two exhibitions on Monday and Tuesday nights, Jan. 15th and 16th. Mr. Bluhm is a very fine artist in his line, his specialties being toe spins and slides and double whirls. It is the opinion of some that he is the best skater that has ever appeared at that rink. A grand masquerade is to take place there on Tuesday, Jan. 23d.

CALLED CURRIN, the champion, has been delighting the denizens of the Pacific slope with exhibitions of the art skatorial, on his native stamping ground. He has visited San Francisco, Sacramento, Stockton, San Jose, Oakland, Vallejo, Napa, Santa Rosa, and other places, everywhere meeting with success. At last advices he was fulfilling an engagement at the Pavilion, San Francisco. He don't expect to come east before spring.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ In consequence of the rejection of the proposed tax on raw material M. Thiers sent to the Assembly on Jan 25th his formal resignation as President of the republic of France. FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

OUR ADVICES concerning amusements in London, Eng., and elsewhere, are up to Jan. 7th. No changes had occurred at the London theatres, where the Christmas entertainments were in full blast, to attempt any description of which would require more space than we could spare.

ARTHUR CLINTON, an actor playing heavy business, died at Middlesborough, Eng., during the latter part of Dec., 1871, at the age of twenty six years.

MISS HARRIET MAY ROOKE, the mother of J. W. Rooke, comedian, died at Westminster, London, Eng., Dec. 26th, 1871, aged 71 years.

W. BROWN died at Islington, Eng., Dec. 22d, 1871, in the eightieth year of his age, of acute bronchitis, after only four days' illness. The deceased, who in his younger days was a member of the theatrical profession, was brother to the late Mrs. T. Robertson, of the London circuit; uncle to the late Mrs. Yates, of the Adelphi; and father to the Sisters Sophia and Annie, who sorrowfully mourn his loss.

THE WIFE OF GEORGE COPPIN, the well known manager at Melbourne, Australia, presented him with a daughter on Oct. 30th.

MISS ROSE NATHAN, the columbine at the Britannia Theatre, London, Eng., died in that city, Jan. 4th, of erysipelas and congestion of the lungs, at the age of forty-three years.

MR. LAURENCE, clown at the Theatre Royal, Cheltenham, Eng., met with a severe accident during the week ending Jan. 6th. In making a leap those behind the scenes were not prepared to catch him, and he fell heavily, sustaining several severe bruises.

JOHN WEST fell from the flies to the stage of the Royal Amphitheatre, Liverpool, Eng., on Jan. 1st, and was instantly killed. He was sixty years of age and had been for many years attached to that theatre as a supernumerary, but was engaged for the Christmas pantomime for a character part.

NELSON LEE, panoramic author and actor, died at his residence, Dalston, England, January 2d, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. He was born at Kew, on the 8th of January, 18 6, the very day that consigned to the tomb the mortal remains of the great naval hero, after whom he had been named, his father, Lieutenant Colonel Lee, being at the time doing duty at the funeral. His parents intended that he should enter the naval profession, but while he was still young the sad news arrived in England of his father's death in India, which caused a change in the prospects of the family. His brother James, engaged in a counting-house in the city, had formed an acquaintance with Bradley and Blanchard, the great combatants at the Coburg. By this means an introduction was obtained behind the scenes, and, having once smelt the lamps, Nelson Lee became infatuated with the stage. He made his first appearance on the stage at a private theatre in London, playing a small part in "The Miller and his Men," after which he performed occasionally at Deptford. At length he obtained a situation as utility at the old Royalty Theatre, under the stage management of Mr. Davidge. Shortly afterwards Ramo Samee, a renowned Indian juggler, appeared at the Coburg, before the glass curtain. Taking a liking to his performance, Nelson Lee practiced at the tricks of legerdemain night and day, until he became proficient in the art. He then joined Gyngell, a great conjuror, and traveled with him through England. After this he became a member of Richardson's company for a season, performing occasionally, on gala nights, at Vauxhall. Here he met with a Mr. Gray, a proprietor of Marionettes, and enjoined into an engagement to go through Scotland. He sailed in a smack, called the Frith of Forth, and was nearly wrecked, the vessel being driven, in great distress, into Scarborough harbor. During the time of repairs he obtained the Masons' Hall and got up an entertainment, which was attended with great success. The vessel being righted, he proceeded on her voyage, reaching Leith in safety. Thence he proceeded to Edinburgh, where he met with a series of disasters, and finally joined Bodsworth and Stevens, conjurors, to perform juggling feats, with whom he remained some six months, traveling through Scotland. On leaving them he returned to London, and joined Mr. Elliston at the Surrey Theatre, to play in the pantomime. Here he remained seven years as an actor, playing Harlequin at Christmas. During this time he commenced pantomime writing. His first pantomime was played under Mr. Osbaldiston's management. The next was written for Mr. Ducrow, and played at Astley's, entitled "Johnny Gilpin," a subject again produced by him some years after, for Mr. Astley, in another form. It may here be said that he was the author of the almost incredible number of two hundred and nine pantomimes, all of which have been played. Pursuing his career, we next find him at the Coburg in 1834, under the management of Mr. Yates, where he remained three years, playing harlequin, clown and pantaloon, in one week, besides having written the pantomime. After this he joined Mr. Osbaldiston, and became his stage manager at Sadler's Wells, during which engagement he first made the acquaintance of his future partner, Mr. Johnson, having had the management of his benefits at the Surrey Theatre. On the death of Mr. Richardson, the showman, in 1836, Nelson Lee called on Mr. Johnson, and proposed that they together, should become proprietor of Richardson's Traveling Theatre, an arrangement which was soon concluded. A new phase of life now opened to him. The speculation was attended with great success. They carried on this establishment with much liberality and gained the same respect as their predecessor had done. They then became lessees of the Marylebone Theatre—a house they soon found too small for their style of management, shortly after they removed to the Pavilion. Then they took a lease of the Standard Theatre, and finally they settled down at the City of London Theatre, which they prosperously conducted for fifteen years. On the death of his old partner, Mr. Johnson, which took place in 1864, Mr. Nelson Lee continued the management for three seasons on his own account. He retired from the theatre in 1868, and was understood to have sold the property to advantage for railway purposes. The following is a characteristic letter, sent by Mr. Nelson Lee to Mr. J. H. Stead, bearing date December 27th, which would show that his flow of spirits was not abated during the endurance of much physical pain:—

"Dear J. H. Stead while this you read
Much pain do I endure.
Rheumatics seize me, and I do
Not know a 'perfect cure.'
While I'm in pain at Surrey lane
You'll get a fooling sure;
And all will cry as well as I
Give us the 'Perfect Cure.'"

The funeral took place on Jan. 5th and was largely attended by the relatives, friends and members of the profession, the remains being buried in the family grave at Abney Park Cemetery.

THE LIMAN remains of the Capitole, at Toulouse, France, has recently been completely inundated by the bursting, during the frost, of a large reservoir of water on the roof, constructed there in case of fire. Workmen are employed day and night in pumping, to clear the basement story. The decorations and upholstery of the building have suffered considerable damage.

Circuses.

AT ASTLEY'S AMPHITHEATRE, on Hengler's Circus, London, Eng., no chance of note had taken place in the holiday programme, ... Harry Holcum's feat of catching in his hands a cannon ball fired from a large cannon, at the Holborn Amphitheatre, is creating a great sensation.

A LION TAMER KILLED.—A dreadful affair took place recently, at Maader's Wild Beast Menagerie, which was exhibiting at Bolton, Eng. Manardi, the lion tamer, was going through a performance about half-past three, when with his mouth open, one of the animals struck him with its paw and he fell upon one knee. He turned round and struck at it with a sword he had in his hand, when another lion placed its paw upon his legs holding him down, and tearing the integuments from his body. Four of the lions then attacked him, but Manardi kept cool, and struck at them with his sword. They knocked him to the other end of the caravan, when he fired his revolver—which was loaded with blank cartridge—three times amongst them. While this was going on the greatest excitement prevailed amongst the spectators, who greatly retarded the authorities in their efforts to rescue the lion tamer. The performance in which this shocking affair occurred was a special one, and it had not been deemed necessary to prepare hot irons, as is customary, before Manardi entered the den. Irons were heated, however, but nearly ten minutes elapsed before the man could be got out; he was then frightfully mangled, the back part of his scalp being torn away, and lumps of flesh bitten out of his thighs. He raised his head to show that he was still alive, and remarked on his way to the infirmary that he was done for. He died almost as soon as he had been admitted to that institution. He was in liquor at the time of the accident, but not drunk. The lion which attacked him bit him on Monday, and he had often told his wife that he was afraid of it. Manardi, who, we believe, originally engaged in life as a keeper of lions, he had one of his arms torn off, two lions attacking him, but on that occasion the lions were driven off by heated irons. Manardi—whose proper name was John McCarty—was born in Cork, and was 33 years of age. He has left a widow, but no children. An inquest was held on his body, when a verdict of "Misadventure" was returned, the jury adding that they felt it to be their bounden duty to express their entire disapprobation of the reckless custom of so-called tamers performing in the dens where ferocious animals are caged up.

CHIARINI'S CIRCUS was to have closed at Bahia, Brazil, Jan. 2d, and to have left for Pernambuco on the 4th. Company all well.

FUNNY FANCIES.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.
BY JOSEPH J. GRANT.

"NO THOROUH FARE."

They brought us roasts and viands most delicious—
The choicest beefs and muttons, wines and ales;
The waiters spry, the steward most officious—
To the winds, for once, with Paris and Versailles!
Long life to cooks, may we'er they cease to cater—
May ne'er they cease, with true and zealous care,
To vanquish Hunger, gnawing dissipater,
And conundict the words, No thorough fare!

GRINDING.

Within the mill,
Upon the hill,
The surdy miller sat,
With naught to grind,
To flour so fine,
And all the crop so fat!

Naught had he ground,
No single pound,
All day, to him so loath,
So, up he sprang,
And with a twang,
Ground out an oath.

WOMAN AND HER RIGHTS.

Where now this "knocker," pugilistic blonde,
This highly lauded, sweet, bewitching talker,
This all the fa'rite of the demi-monde—
Why not match her with some female Walker?
One of Chicago fame, the other Texan.
But fair of mould, muscle, brain and brass,
'Twould be a sight to see them "shy the castor,"
And gently one another "send to grass."

THE NEWS.

"With horrid dread this bloody tale,
My timid soul imbues—
Yet, tell me, Emma, won't you, dear,
How took his wife the news?"

Replied fair Emma:—"Why, my love,
You ask so very queer,
For if she took the news at all,
Why not, then, by the year?"

SMILING.

All day have I grumbled and fumbled and worried,
Exhausted all measures the day to beguile,
This nuisance's audacious, impertinent, nervous,
If'll drop in at Joha's and indu ge in a "smile."

Buffalo, 1871.

THE ROMANCE OF BEGGARS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY OSCAR BRUCE.

Throughout the whole region of romance and drama there is no state in life so susceptible to feeling, yet so studiously avoided by the novelist or dramatist, as that of beggary. Its instances in Shakespeare are notably ingenious, and Sheridan, in making a central figure of a tattered vagrant, has clothed him in all the attributes of a gentleman; and while Master William carries his rags in the most extreme of custom, he does so in a rather inconsistent manner, and, to use a slang phrase, "rags flounces" in such a fashion that he would never exact the tiniest of mutes from the most charitable of widows. In contrast with the instances are numerous and touching, and outside of that ratsa as inspired writings, Mr. Dickens, with his electrical pen, has given in Little Nell and Old Trent, the most touching illustrations of the kind ever written. The sad, sweet story of the child's perfect life will always be fresh and new, and in the time to come the story of her death will be probably quoted as one of the richest poems in our language.

Prize fighters and horse jockeys have also suffered neglect until lately, when Mr. Benuicault has generously given them his attention, and shrewdly made Arthur and Nat Gosling central figures in his plays of "Formosa" and "The Flying Scud;" these drawings of character were so healthy, so full of what is really good in human nature, and withal so perfectly consistent and original, that they furnished blood and life for these dramas. Why they had not been taken before, we cannot say, but it is without doubt a fact that every crime in the criminal calendar—excepting, of course, those that are too bestial for the public eye—have been etherialized and invested with a morbid romance, which works almost incalculable mischief amongst young people. Perhaps the most popular of these works is the Jack Sheppard of Ainsworth, a creation which has been quietly talked about and picked to pieces by the great minds of the day, and which is unquestionably, in point of narration, construction, character and incident, one of the finest works in the language. It can never be admitted as such, however, as its moral is totally bad. Crime is never lovely, and although Mr. Ainsworth makes claim of a moral in his story, this claim is utterly without foundation. The officers of the law are presented as the vilest of creatures—perhaps a true picture in the single instance of Jonathan Wild—and the associates of Jack, his prostitutes and his fellows, are sympathetic, naturally good-hearted creatures. Wood, if Ainsworth can be said to have been successful; he made Dick Turpin too fine a gentleman to render him attractive. Again, we find the same illustration in Bulwer; his Pelham was a dissipate; his Clifford an excessively romantic highwayman; his exquisitely sentimental Eugene Aram the most refined and delicate of murderers, while in "Alice" and "Maltravers" we have the poetic sides of seduction and implied incest. That these things are redolent of evil there can be no doubt, and when the narration has grown cheap, the hand of a master, their fascinations are generally productive of bad results.

There is much romance in vagrancy, but little in beggary. Mr. Trowbridge's picturesque pad had a thousand points of interest, but we question if there is much to be found in the bleat-eyed loafer who huddles up to you and says:—"Boss, give a poor chap a couple of cents to get some coffee;" but there are some individuals which are worthy of classification amongst the "strange."

Begging is, with a great number of its professors, nothing more or less than a profitable business. George Reynolds, in one of those vivid, immoral pictures of London life that have gained him such unenviable celebrity, gives a somewhat exaggerated, but, to a certain extent, true picture of "how it is done." The scene is a long, airish room in the slums of Saffron Hill or St. Giles; the time, evening. The bare rafters are strung with spider lace, the floor covered with a thick coating of white sand, while the broken plastering on the walls is embellished with rude designs in charcoal, copies of bawdy songs and cheap caricatures of public personages, among whom "Jack Ketch and his one-armed bride" fill a conspicuous position. There is a long board running almost the entire length of the room, which is covered with ragged bits of crockery, and a motley show of forks, spoons and cutlery, whose collection has probably taxed every other house in the vicinity. It has just grown dark, and two or three greasy lamps suspended from the rafters are lighted, and their sickly radiance is thrown on a few suspicious looking groups, who are either hugging the huge, red hot stove, or canvassing the result of the day's work. The number is constantly increased until, at last, the room is crowded with fevers, codgers, kinchens, pup swappers, sneaks, prigs and a large majority of beggars—these last are in numerical ascendancy and clad in the "habiliments of woe." All the fictions that meat is heir to are here carnally presented; and Mark Twain, who suggests an unqualified success to a blue-faced beggar, could have here found that individual in the flesh. A one-legged, several slip-shod women bring up, through a trap stairway in the floor, joints of bottled and roasted beef and mutton, whose weight strained their full arms to their utmost tension. Enormous basins of soups and baked meats were then put in place, flanked with pyramids of Russian turnips and baby potatoes, which sent up clouds of steam. Enormous quarten loaves were put at regular distances, banked with cans of ale and mugs of spirits. A one sweeping miracle, without parallel in scripture, the blind saw, the lame walked and the cripple became straight. Broken backs, missing limbs, sightless balls, were straightened, supplied or endowed, as the case might be. Tooth and nail, they fell on the coarse yet substantial provision, and when all were filled the table was cleared, and glasses of hot punch, packs of cards announced were set on the board, and whoever wished to indulge therein, while those who were on the night lay ventured forth on their "nefarious pursuits."

This strange account of rude luxury is verified in substance by the statement of numerous persons, who testify to the knowledge of mendicants keeping bank accounts, and living comparatively high. An American lady, while in Paris, crossed one of the bridges, and was affected to the extent of tears by the piteous appearance of a lame beggar. On reaching her hotel she found that she had made a rather unfortunate mistake, and had bestowed, instead of the sum intended, a coin of much higher value. Returning next day, she was unable to find the beggar, but made inquir es and obtained his address. She immediately set out, and found that the place designated was a quiet and aristocratic hotel. She made the inquiry, however, and learned that the person indicated did reside there, and was accordingly shown to a parlor, an apartment which was fitted up in the extreme of luxury. Our beggar was at home, being a trifle indisposed, and made his appearance slippered, capped and gowned. He asked the lady's business in the most polite manner, and when she told him, he called his valet. This last personage, who was another addition to the series of surprises, was ordered to bring "yesterday's receipts," which he accordingly did on a silver waiter, they being a curious assortment of various coins, from which that contributed by the lady was picked out and returned, its large amount rendering it discernable.

The charitable Miss Lucretia Foxes, who abound in Sunday school communities, and who take on "treasures for the future life" in small quantities, are turned to good account by those who have little principle in the manner of obtaining "small favors." We have often heard of children being sent to several of these Sabbath schools, and reaping the accumulated benefit from their soft-hearted patrons. A lady friend of ours, who works a degree of good in an unostentatious manner, being really charitable and desirous of helping those who require it, notices two little German girls in her class at Sunday school. The tiny frauleins were very thinly clad. She told them to come to her house on the following afternoon and she would furnish them with better clothes. One was punctual, and, after receiving her garments, requested that her sister's be given her also, and she would take them "home."

"But why did not your sister come herself?" asked the lady.

"She has to bake her music lesson dis afternoon," was the astonishing reply.

This lady is not slinging raiment about with her former vigor.

There is a class of mendicants who venture on the impudent assumptive style, who often indulge in dry satire and wit, and very often make a repartee worthy of a Gerrold.

"Where the devil did you come from?" said John Wilkes one day to a beggar who had accosted him.

"From the devil," was the curt reply.

"What is the style of things there?" asked Wilkes.

"Much the same as here—they take in the rich and keep out the poor."

This reminds us of that little squ'b of Charles Lamb, who was too light-hearted to miss an opportunity for a jest, even when its object was misery:—

"I'm a sad sir," said a poor woman, with streaming eyes, one miserable morning in March, "I have seen better days."

"Indeed, madam," said Lamb, raising his umbrella, "I have myself."

Charity is a good deal like depositing money in a bank—its disposition is doubtful. Some of these people have a studied system of extorting money, and can act on the sensibilities of the least impressionable of us. It is a perfect art, and those who pity the most, and not the most liberally, are probably deriving a better income from the practice than the persons who imagine they are aiding them, while really worthy people requiring assistance fail to obtain it because their stories are awkward or badly told, or that they repress their fee lings to a great extent. We remember one cripple, a sailor, who used to sit in a ragged uniform beside a little table, on which was placed a ship model, holding his little contribution plate and discharge from the navy. For a time the box was stuffed with dimes, pennies and fips, the novelty attracting the attention of passers by. After a time poor Jack was foolish enough to get fat, clean and jaunty. He got a new suit of sailor duds, put an extra dash of grease on his locks, and evidently "pecked" better than formerly. Note the result. In a short time poor Jack had to make another move, and perhaps will remain in profitable misery on his next "slit."

A PENNY'S WORTH.

WHAT CAN BE BOUGHT FOR ONE IN LONDON.

The Peripatetic Street Merchants and their Wares.

During a walk along almost any thoroughfare, at any time of the day or evening, there will be scores of applications to invest a penny in miscellaneous articles. Even in crowded city streets, during the most busy time of the day, and in spite of the terrors of policemen, venders of such wares go their best to make a livelihood. Lombard street and the area of the Royal Exchange are favorite spots with these walking merchants, who deal in diaries, account books, miniature song books and copies of "The Pilgrim's Progress," shirt studs, sleeve links, umbrella rings, India rubber bands, toothpicks and many other useful and useless articles. If, however, any desire exists to see how much skill, trouble and industry are devoted to the sale of penny articles in the streets, a visit should be paid to Shoreditch, to Whitechapel, to Tottenham Court Road, to the Newcut and to similar densely populated localities, especially on a Saturday night.

No end of articles for use in domestic economy may be purchased for a penny. One is an apparatus for roasting meat, and really it is a clever contrivance, made of iron wire and stout worsted, and warranted to turn equal to any bottle jack. There are toasting forks, large and small, also made of iron wire, and ornamented with brass wire; wooden rolling pins; knives and forks; tin candle springs, to fit any candlestick; second hand flat irons and Italian irons, and hundreds of other things. Indeed, almost anything may be bought in the streets of London, from little washleather bags up to an iron hand vice, from a child's watch to a corkscrew from a key ring to a bead necklace; and the student of human nature may find not a little to instruct and amuse in his observation of this phase of London life. Thousands of these venders of cheap articles literally go forth each day to earn their bread before it can be eaten, and to earn a lodging before shelter can be found for the night.

Penny ornaments for the house abound. Vases, not always the most shapely; figures of men and women, with strange dresses strangely colored; small but gaudy prints, in black frames; common photographs, about three inches by two, with a metal border; shells, highly polished, and many similar things, are offered for sale as ornaments for the mantel upon the mantel shelf, or upon the well-rubbed chest of drawers which the better class of poor people are so proud of having in their room.

Sanitary matters, and those relating to personal adornment, form important items with the street dealers. We may purchase cakes of scented soap, pomatum, "real bear's grease," cakes of blacking, and paste blacking in tun boxes, dubbin for softening the boots, and a preparation for making them water-proof. There are tooth brushes and tooth powder, combs of all kinds, pins, looking glasses and razor paste. The man who sells the last is a character. He has on his tray one or two razors which he sharpens on a strop with the paste, and then, extracting from his head two or three hairs, he dexterously severs one by drawing it across the razor—a feat by no means easy of performance. He then takes a piece of wood and chops and hacks it with the razor, which is restored to its temper and edge by a new application of the paste. Another man sells small slabs of a composition resembling mottled soap, with which grease and stains can be removed from cloth or silk. He usually takes the greasy cap or jacket collar of some urchin standing by, and operates upon it, discoursing all the while, in street "patter," of the merits and cheapness of the article he sells.

Here and there we come upon a tea tray covered with penny rings, "real keepers," polished stones, brooches, buckles, strings of beads, ear-drops, and a variety of common ornaments. Yonder is a man who has a cap from or a sprig of artificial flowers can be bought for the same small coin. Then we find crockery and glass, mostly set out on straw in the road, where can be bought penny dishes, plates, mugs, jugs and tumblers. Further on are mouse-traps, scissors, snuffers, lucifers, fuses, foot-rules in three divisions, with hinges, yard tapes, brace ends, boot laces, garters, colored handkerchiefs, strips of embroidery, tapes and cottons, needl s and pins, note paper, pens and ink.

Nor are the children forgotten. Toys and puzzles are provided—such as dolls, dressed and unadorned; masks, including some hideously black; jewsharps, whistles, trumpets, rattles, whips, tops, kaleidoscopes, kites, marbles, and sweetmeats. If the grown-up children like to be amused, they may have for a penny a powerful magnifier in the shape of a glass ball, an inch in diameter, filled with water and mounted on a glass stem; or they may purchase "a real microscope, which magnifies two hundred times," according to the description of the vendor. This certainly is an ingenious little article, made out of a pill-box. In the rim of the lid a piece of common window glass is inserted, and over a small hole in the bottom some Canada balsam is dropped, and this gum, being transparent, forms a natural lens of tolerable power.

Literature is represented by stalls, on which lie books, pamphlets and tracts, for the most part rescued from the oblivion of the butter shop, and offered at a penny. Of course, most of these are dear at the price, even as waste paper, though now and then something worth having may be picked up. There, also, almanacs, diaries, pocket books, pencils, sealing wax, seals, key rings, stamps, song books, "containing all the new and popular songs," or conundrums, all the old cry is, "Under fifty songs for a penny. Occasionally a man is seen selling pens cards, which he undertakes will teach any person to write stenography in three hours. This man has been better days. His cards are not a delusion, although the poor fellow has to deliver his set speech about them many times in the course of the evening. Here is a specimen of his oratory: "Some people laugh at anything sold in the street, especially if it is offered at a penny. Now, if I was to say shillings apiece for these cards, many would purchase them, who now scoff at the idea of a penny. But a nimble penny is better than a slow shilling, and, as I wish to make this useful art a popular one, I offer the cards at the low price of one penny. Diogenes, you know, lived in a tub, and many of the greatest benefactors of the world have been obscure and despised people. So you must not judge of me and of my system by what I look," &c. Indeed, this would be most unfortunate, for the poor fellow does not seem to have a thriving time. But he dilates in these set terms upon the advantages of shorthand in general and of his system in particular, stopping now and then to dispose of a card.

Eatables and drinkables without end may be had for a penny in the streets, including hot stewed eels, slices of fried fish, pigs' feet, sheep's trotters, baked potatoes, pies, cakes, glutinous-looking pastry, coffee and bread and butter, oysters, saucers of whelks and mussels, hot elder wine, lemonade, ginger-beer, sherbet, little piles of carrots, onions, and turnips. If we need herbs, either for cooking or for medicine, we may choose from nearly all the savory or medicinal herbs found in England. If we are troubled with corns, we may have infallible plasters or ointments which will cure them out in no time; root and branch, in proof of which a bottle is held up by the seller, containing in some liquid what may be corns, or fragments of chamois leather, or anything else. If we have a cough, we may obtain drops warranted to cure it in two days, though the poor man who sells them is himself troubled with a frightful cough, which will soon wear him down to the grave. He explains it half apologetically by saying that he got very wet the other night, and that he is exposed too much to the weather. This remark applies to nearly all the peripatetic street merchants, whose life is certainly a hard one and a continual struggle for bare existence at the best of times. How many give up the struggle year by year no one knows.

ABOUT OLD MAIDS AND WIDOWS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY NELLIE NETTLES.

I'm a widow—not "a widow bewitched," as a dear little friend of mine called me the other day; I wonder what she meant; do you know, Mr. CLIPPER? Are they a new article got up in this progressive age of ours? There, now, don't pity me because I'm a widow. I hate to be pitied, it makes one feel so mean. Now, I suppose you will wonder what kind of a contributor I am, and what possessed me to write to you. Well, a little fairy friend wanted me to, and to please I've done so—not that I expect to see Nellies in the CLIPPER growing, but I would not be surprised to see Nellies clipped by the CLIPPER. To-night a restless feeling has come over me; I cannot sleep it off; 'tis twelve, the witching hour, and not gone yet. Is there in the air we breathe—in that mysterious midnight air which broods over us silently—is there some power which words cannot describe, and which enters the sleeper's soul and impels, or whispers, something which shall impel us to some waking deed? We can only say it seems that I am impelled to jot down a few random thoughts on the subject of old maids and widows. I have no patience with the outcry against old maids and widows. It is strange that a woman cannot have the right to live single without having every senseless human animal heaping insults on her. If Miss Smith don't get married they know why; it isn't because she don't want to, but because no one would ever make her an offer. How do they know? Why easily enough; if she had she would have been married long ago. Who ever heard of an old maid rejecting a man? The idea; when the world is running over with irresistibles in the very tip of fashion, patented in the tailor's best broadcloth. Of course they would have one of them if they could get them. The world is a hard rock to be knocked on, but 'tis not worth minding. I'm very sure I would not let it break all my bones on the sharp points if I was an old maid; but it cannot be very pleasant to be spoken of as "that old maid," "cross old thing," "stingy, mean, long-nosed," and a host of other things too numerous to mention. These things are trifles, but just such things make or mar our happiness. There are women who have natures that resemble fruits, which must be wormwood to them. The worst feature in this is that they are made by our own sex more frequently than by men, and this is a problem that many writers have tried in vain to solve; I among the rest. Why are women the most bitter foes women have? I for one would be glad to have some one answer it.

And widows! What a horrid set they are, to be sure. If Deacon Jones is seen bowing to widow Green, it is at once surmised that she is trying to catch him. Should she be so fortunate as to get a new dress, "she is fixing up for another husband—shameful thing." If the cares of life set heavily on her and she has a troubled look on her face, she is "always putting on that woe-begone look to make folks pity her." If she tries to be cheerful, and is seen to indulge in a laugh, "oh, my, what a heartless creature—and poor Green hardly cold in his grave." And so old maids and widows seem to be an eye sore, and thus it is that many of them marry very poor specimens of men to escape the dreaded stigma of being an old maid or a manœuvring widow. It is a weak mind, I know, but this does not alter the facts. I wonder how it is that there is never a cry raised against an old bachelor? I wonder if our Tom can answer that? I've been told that he is a bach, but I don't know. Who can tell? I can only think, and as I look through fancy's eye—and you know Fancy has a double game for her eye—I think I see a pleasant, handsome face, with a rare, sweet smile for poor struggling humanity, that is worth all the world to a worn and weary heart.

WASTING TIME.

—Many moments leak out and run to waste by innumerable and almost invisible chinks. But one cause will be found sufficient to account for nearly the whole leakage. The loosening of the bands of decision, want of purpose, is the root of the whole evil. We have an indefinite sense that we ought to be doing something, that it would be better and more agreeable to us to be doing something for the good of ourselves and of our fellow creatures. But the result of this vague idea generally is, that much time is lost in considering what is best to be done because we are not satisfied with doing merely what is good to be done. It would be well if we could always bear in mind and apply the remark of Dr. Johnson, that "there is no knowledge so minute but he would rather know it than not."

CLIPPER VARIETIES.

Comprising Sentimental Ballads, Songs and Dances, Comic Songs, Jokes, Old Bills, Reminiscences, etc.

WRITTEN AND COLLATED EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

BONES ATTENDS A "MASH" BALL.

INTERLOCUTOR.—What's all this I hear, Mr. Bones; I thought you had made a resolve to give up all frolicking, and lead a respectable, sober life hereafter.

BONES.—You mean dat mash ball dat I send todder evenin', ober in Mulberry street?

INT.—By what means did you obtain admission to a masked ball?

BONES.—You mean how did I git in.

INT.—That's just it, sir.

BONES.—Bought my ticket afore hand, of course.

INT.—But how came the doorkeeper to let you pass?

BONES.—Why, dere was a great crowd present, and I went in on de press. De pressure was so great, in de fusion dey t'ought I was in de character of Jim Crow or somethin', and eb'rybody laff and say how well made up I was for de part. Golly! didn't I hab a time, dough! Clawed a hold of de han'somest gal in de room—such arms, such shoulders, such a figger! She's a foot like a mud scow, and her voice, oh, her voice was—well, it was like de hominny ob de sphere.

INT.—Harmony, sir, harmony.

BONES.—When a voice am very rich it's said to be full o' hominy, isn't it? and her's sound as if her mouth was full of somethin', anyhow. Seein' her sittin' alone, quite disconsolate, like a hen dat's lost her chickens. I walks up to her and ax her out to dance. Said she, "Which kind ob dance you prefer, de squadrille or de polka?" or, perhaps, you like de galley best." "De synad devil by all means," said I, remem'rin' I was attach' to de militia. Well, de devine creature necked me, and I took a fresh hold onto her, and off we sailed—de floor manager singin' out balancey, balancey, forward two and all dat, till de breakdown come. Den we go to a table and she knock and tell de waiter to fotch de cart. "I—look here," said I, wid dis—"I ax you to take a bite, but I didn't 'gree to be responsible for no cart full." "Pshaw!" said she, kinder o' playful, tappin' me wid her fan; "how absurd! I mean de billy de fare." "O! de bill of fare? Dat's quite another affair," said I. Wid dat she sailed in, and when she'd got down her second gorge ob ice cream, "Dere," said she, "dere goes de signal for de waltz. What's your domino?" "Waiter," says I, bring us some dominoes," "You'll find them in de dressin' rooms," says he; and wid dat I put after dem. Would you b'lieve it, de domino was only a cloak. But I took one, and wid it a wig and mask, and den I sailed out into de ball room once more.

INT.—But what was your inamorata all this while?

BONES.—O, I leab her to fend de bill.

INT.—That it was a trumped-up charge. Now that we've heard your noisy blow, we'll hear our clear-starched ballad singer:—

GENTLY BLOW.

Gently blow, thou fragrant wind,
Bearing kisses to my love,
Sweeter she and fairer far
Than the flowers that shed above;
Since I may not kiss her hand
With these burning lips of mine,
Let me send a kiss by thee—
Waft it, gentle zephyr, thine.
Chorus—Gently blow, thou fragrant wind, etc.

Golden sunbeams tinge her cheek
With a ruddy vermeil flush;
Sport amid her glossy curls,
In her delicious blush;
Moonbeams nestle in her eyes,
Making sister stars of them;
Tell her that I love her true
And I kiss her garment's hem.
Chorus—Gently blow, thou fragrant wind, etc.

ANOTHER OLD BOSTON BILL.

To Mr. A. F. Tracy we are indebted for the following copy of a Boston play bill of nearly eighty years ago. The Mr. Powell mentioned was Mr. Charles Stuart Powell, who was manager of the first Boston theatre.

AT CONCERT HALL,
on Monday, August 12th, 1791; Wednesday, 18th, and Friday, 17th, will be performed, for the benefit of Mr. Powell, from the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, a favorite pasticcio, called
THE EVENING BRUSH, FOR RUBBING OFF THE RUST OF CARE.

The Chief Subjects of Laughter are Modern Spouters, State Candidates, Tragedy Tailors, Wooden Actors, Butchers in Heroics, Buffoons in Blank Verse, Bagglers, Blunderers, &c.
Laughter, with reason, is surely no treason,
Propriety of place can have no cause to blush;
And the sons of true merit no grudge can inherit,
To see rank imposters exposed by the Brush.

With a contrasted set of original songs, particularly the Frozi comedy of Human Life; Variety Alley; the Date Obolum Belisario; the Golden Days of Good Queen Bess, etc.

The whole to conclude with a Whimsical Transformation, or Humorous Dwarf Dance.

Tickets half a dollar, &c.

THE POTOMAC SHADDER.

Tune—OLD KENTUCKY HOME.

BY OLIVER J. LAWRENCE.

Oh de cold winds blow, and de ribber's white wid spray,
'Tis winter, de tall trees rock and bow;
De shore in sno-e am cold, I'm not at play,
Dis fisherman's all sad and lonely now.
Chorus—April am a coming; April bright and gay,
Den shove my boat from shore, for light I bends de oar,
As dis night I'll be de shaddy.

Golly, how dey'll roar when I meets dem on de shore,
Frisky niggas way from Washington;
And when in comes de shad, den it's stand back "Ole Dad,"
Let de fishes flop out in de sun.
Chorus—Hauly out de seine in ebery boat it high and dry—
Den shove our boat from shore, for light we pulls de oar,
And pull niggas, gently pull, we does cry.

De moon's about to shine—"Out wid anoder line,"
'Tis de last haul, niggas row away;
Den if you'll not judge of my system by what I look,"
Dat's what I tink I hear de captain say.
Chorus—Stow your seines, you darkies, stow dem for to-night,
For wid de rising sun, we'll have "anoder run"
Of scaly shad and silver shad so bright.

THE HISTORY OF THE TUNE OF "DIXIE."

"Dixie" was composed and arranged by Dan. Emmet, a member of a traveling minstrel party, who, while at Mobile in the winter of 1847 '48, heard some negro laborers singing on the levee while loading a steamboat with cotton. The thought struck him, that with a little change of measure, it could be made a good song and "walk around," which generally winds up a negro minstrel concert. Dan. arranged it and produced it. It became a success, and was sung and played all over the country by all the bands. In the spring of 1861 Mrs. John Wood went to New Orleans to play an engagement at the Varieties Theatre. During the time she appeared in Broughan's burlesque of "Pocahontas," she had a brief rehearsal of the piece everything was well till near the close of the second act; Tom McDonough, the prompter, got up a Zouave march and drill by twenty-two ladies, led by Susan Denin. Everything run smooth, but the music for the march could not be fixed upon. Carlo Patti was leader of the orchestra and he tried several marches, but none suited McDonough—one was too slow, another was too tame, another not enough spirit. At length Patti struck up the air of "Dixie." "That will do, Patti—that's the very thing," said Tom, and "Dixie" was played, and the march gone through with, and the chorus by all the characters. At night it received a double encore and "Pocahontas" had a "run," and from that time out the streets and parlors rang with "Dixie." The war broke out that spring, and the military bands took it up, and "Dixie" because to the south what the Marseillaise hymn was to the French. And that's how "Dixie" became the popular war song of the south.

KISS ME, DARLING, IN THE MORNING.

Kiss me, darling, in the morning,
When the dew's on flower and thorn,
Ere the stars have paled their burning,
Darling, kiss me in the morn.
Kiss me, darling, in the morning,
When the golden gad of day
Tips the mountain's brow with splendor,
Darling, kiss my dreams away.
Chorus—Kiss me, darling, in the morning, etc.

Kiss me, darling, when the noonday
Reigns o'er valley, hill and grove;
When the dancing light waves play,
Darling, kiss me in thy love.
Kiss me, darling, when the sunshine
Mingles with the falling rain,
In a wreath of blended beauty,
Darling, kiss me once again.
Chorus—Kiss me, darling, in the morning, etc.

Kiss me, darling, when the evening
Gilds the river, lake and shore,
With the day's departing glory,
Darling, kiss me o'er and o'er;
Kiss me, darling, when the sentries
Of the night their vigils keep;
When the shadows draw the curtains,
Darling, kiss my eyes to sleep.
Chorus—Kiss me, darling, in the morning, etc.

HOW TO ACT ROMEO.—The vanity of Garrick induced him to ask Macklin what he thought of the different modes of acting Romeo, adopted by Barry and himself. "Sir," said Macklin, "Barry comes into the garden strutting and talking loud, like a lord, about his love, that I wonder that the Capulets do not come out and toss the fellow in a blanket." "Well, my dear Mack," exclaimed Garrick, "go on." "Now," says Macklin, "how does Garrick act this? Why, sir, sensible that the family are at enmity with him and his house, he comes creeping in upon his toes, whispering his love, and looking about him just like a thief in the night."

DAVID COPPERFIELD.—"David Copperfield" was dramatised by Dr. Northall for Burton, who produced his drama Dec. 30th, 1850. Burton played Micawber with great success, supported by George Jordan as Copperfield, Blake as Pegotty, Bland as Ham, T. Johnson as Uriah Heep, Mrs. Skerrith as Mrs. Micawber and Mrs. Holman as Mrs. Steerforth. Brougham's dramatization was produced at his Lyceum, Jan. 6th, 1851, with Palmer as David, Brougham as Micawber, Owens as Uriah Heep, Lynne as Pegotty, Mrs. Vernon as Betsy Trotwood, Mrs. Blake as Mrs. Micawber, Miss Taylor as Agnes, Miss Horn as Rose Dartle, and Mrs. Brougham as Clara Pegotty. On the same night a dramatization was also produced at the Bowery Theatre. Miss Susan Denin, Charles Pope, J. R. Scott, G. W. Penno, Mrs. H. Jordan, Mrs. Walcot, and Mrs. Wemyss played the leading parts.

BARNABY RUDGE.—A dramatisation of this novel was brought out at the New Chatham Theatre in September, 1841. The cast embraced Mrs. C. Thorne, Barnaby Rudge; Mr. Kirby, Old Rudge; Miss E. Mestayer, Dolly Varden; Mrs. Judah, Mrs. Varden; Mrs. Blake, Mrs. Rudge, and Mrs. Herbert, Miss Miggs.

TO THE MEMORY OF COL. JAMES FISK, JR.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY FANNY HERRING.

"Take him for all in all, he was a man.
We ne'er shall look upon his like again."—Shakespeare.

Self made, reliant, shrewd from boyhood's hour,
He strove to gain the wand of wealth and power;
He gained the wand, and as life's sands were sipped,
From pomp and luxury was he untimely nipped.

Smart, active, and, as I've oft been told,
The poor man's friend, the sick, the lame, the old,
All were recipients of his kindly aid;
Generous on earth, may he in Heaven be paid.

For the public taste how much he did their pleasure to gratify
In Drama, Pantomime, Spectacle and the grand Ballet Dance.
To his employees all, what one more kind and true?
The author's hobby and the actor's too.

What one so young, since this new world begun,
In progress did for us as he has done?
Long will the name of Fisk, in this our much loved clime,
Be like a golden orb; with us it will ever shine.

FISK-MANSFIELD-STOKES.

The Suppressed Letters Unearthed.

LOVE, JEALOUSY AND REPROACH.

INDICTMENT OF EDWARD S. STOKES

Now that the body of Col. Fisk, so lately full of life and energy, rests peacefully beneath the sod of a bleak Vermont cemetery, Stokes lies incarcerated in a narrow cell within the strong walls of the gloomy-looking structure appropriately styled the Tombs, and Miss Mansfield, the author of the misfortunes of both, remains in compulsory seclusion in the mansion purchased for her by the dead man, the excitement caused by the foul assassination has almost died away, supplanted by that occasioned by events of more recent occurrence. The latest thing in connection with it, and which has served to keep alive public interest, has been the publication in the Herald of Jan. 14th of the letters written by Fisk to Mansfield, about which there has been so much talk, and to prevent the vexatious use of which, the Colonel was granted an injunction by Judge Pratt, of Brooklyn. For the edification of our readers we herewith reproduce these evidences of Col. Fisk's fatal infatuation, remarking that subsequent interviews with Jay Gould and Mr. Shearman, attorney of the Erie Railway Company, have developed the fact that the batch of correspondence includes all the letters written by him to this woman, and that as given they are correct, save the last, which they pronounce a forgery:—

NEW YORK, Dec. 31, 1869.

MISS MANSFIELD, 15 Lexington avenue.—Come. Will you come over with Fred. and dine with me? If your friends are there bring them along. Yours, truly, J. F., Jr.

Have not heard from you as you promised.

On the back of the envelope the following:—

Come. Fred. is at the door. My room, 8 o'clock. After many good looks I found Mr. Chamberlain. The understanding is now that yourself and Miss Land are to go with me, say at half-past 9 o'clock, and the above gentleman is to come with Fred. as I have some matters to attend to which will take him until that time. Answer this if you will be ready by half past 9 o'clock. Yours, truly, JAMES FISK, JR.

LETTER WRITTEN IN JANUARY, 1868.

Strange you should make my office or the vicinity the scene for a "personal." You must be aware that harm came to me in such foolish vanity, and those that could do it care but little for the interest of the writer of this. Yours, truly, JAMES FISK, JR.

A CLOUD OVERSHADOWS THE NEW YEAR.

SUNDAY EVENING, Feb. 1, 1870.

MY DEAR JOSIE—I received your letter. The words does not surprise me much. You alone sound the issue, and the reward will belong to you. I cannot allow you to depart believing yourself what you write, and must say to you, which you know full well, that all the difference could have been settled with a little more right spirits, and in after days I should feel very kindly towards you out of memory of the great love I have borne for you. I never was aware that you admitted a fault. I have many—God knows too many—and that is one of the long trouble of life, but I never will speak of the future, for full well I know the spirit you take it in. "You know me," and the instincts of your heart will weigh me out in the right scale. I will give you no parting

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

THE WIFE OF THE PERIOD.

Dear Frederick, am I to blame
That you've such odd opinions,
And fancy wives were only meant
To be their husband's minions?
To stay at home from morn till night,
And shun the world's enjoyment,
With servants for society,
And sewing for employment?

A splendid creature I should be,
To pass my time as you'd like!
A sweet domestic nondescript,
Insufferably prude-like!
Imagine what a pleasant fate—
The very thought is shocking—
To have no higher aim in life
Than darn the household stocking.

So, Fred, in future let us have
No more fine words or moral;
Be sure it is not at all my wish
That you and I should quarrel;
But since you have suggested, sir,
My change from gay to quiet,
And threatened a compulsive course,
I merely answer—try it!

A DEMONSTRATIVE DIALOGUE.

AN EXCITING SCENE AT THE CITY OF CHURCHES COURT-HOUSE.—NEARLY A SET-TO WITHOUT GLOVES—A WOMAN THE CAUSE BELLI.

The loungers around the Brooklyn court-house were treated to a rich feast of scandal yesterday morning—a scene exceedingly disgraceful and replete with vile accusations, says the N. Y. Star, of Jan. 17th, from which we quote particulars:—"It was about eleven o'clock when two men were seen standing in front of the new court-house, near the street curb. One was tall, slenderly built, thin-faced, with a long, dark brown beard, flowing black hair, combed behind his ears, and large, keen eyes, lit up with anger. He was attired in mixed pantaloons, black vest and black frock coat, and black felt hat, with a gold chain crossing his vest. He was exceedingly agitated, as his gestures and hurried speech fully indicated. The gentleman whom he addressed was smaller in stature, older in years, stouter in build. He wore a brown overcoat and silk hat. His face was plump, bordered with whiskers gradually fading from black to white. His agitation was also visible. For the better understanding of what follows, the reader will please bear in mind that the taller person was a Mr. W. A. James, and the other E. L. Sanderson, a lawyer well known in Brooklyn. According to the statement of James, who, by the way, is the senior member of a concern which gives, or did give, exhibitions of the "Ruins of Paris," "Scenes in the Holy Land," etc., to Sunday schools—according to his statement, Sanderson became acquainted with his (James') wife at her former residence, No. 206 Washington street, and, after some intercourse, succeeded in obtaining a great influence over her mind. He made the woman believe that he was an instructor and guide sent from heaven to her, and to him she should always give a willing ear. He asked her to deliver up her house in Washington street, and sign it over to him. The woman consented. Sanderson next induced her to commence a suit for the recovery of furniture which had been sold to a certain gentleman, on the grounds that the furniture belonged to her, and her husband had no right to sell it. This case or law-suit is now before the court. And this morning James came to the new court-house for the purpose of testifying in it. James and Sanderson met in the court-house, and the latter looked upon the former's presence in the suit pending as a sign of persecution.

By order of the court the hearing in the case was adjourned, and as Mr. Sanderson was stepping into the street, he overheard a remark made by James to a third party. The following was substantially the dialogue which ensued:—

JAMES.—There goes Sanderson. He looks big this morning. No doubt he feels good, having a woman in tow.

SANDERSON.—Now, I tell you not to follow me. You ought to remember what I gave you in my office, and I warn you not to tempt me to repeat the scene.

JAMES.—You are a dirty, mean coward, a thief and a scoundrel. You spoke fight in presence of a woman, but you dare not touch me now in the open street. You are a thief and a scoundrel; you tried to take my wife from me; you induced her to believe that you were an instrument from heaven, and as such you tried to make her your mistress, but she was too virtuous to yield to your desires. You told her that she was thrown away upon me—that I was no good, and she should abandon me.

SANDERSON.—You dirty, mean tool, I wouldn't touch you—you were not worthy of the woman.

JAMES.—You thief and scoundrel, you tried to seduce my wife, but you failed in your dirty design. She was too virtuous. I'll not stop in my course until you are driven out of this city. You tried to rob me of my wife. Strike me down, if you dare. These are facts that I can prove, gentlemen, in open court.

A LOUNGER.—That's bully, my boy; give it to him. You speak home, young fellow. That's the time.

SANDERSON.—Dare to lay a finger upon me and I'll let you see if I can fight or not.

JAMES.—You dare not lay a finger on me; I am ready now. You struck me before in your office behind a woman. Strike me now, if you dare, you mean, low scoundrel.

At this juncture a fight seemed imminent. The crowd became more dense, and some morbid minds were disposed to believe that a Fisk-Stokes tragedy was hatching. They were disappointed. The disputants departed without striking a blow.

CONNUBIAL INFELICITIES.

Mary E. Adams was one of the three applicants before Judge Cox yesterday for a divorce. She charged her husband with extreme cruelty, gross neglect of duty and adultery. The husband, on his part, made counter charges, charging his wife with drunkenness and adultery. The parties were colored people, living on the verge of Bucktown. The event of the trial was a sort of sensation for that delectable locality, and, as a consequence, its population was out in large numbers to witness the proceedings. The multiplicity of black faces in the court-room, added to the clouded sky, made yesterday a dark day in the history of the court. The testimony in the case was exceedingly conflicting, but presented nothing of a remarkable character. Judge Cox, in disposing of the case, said there was no doubt that the defendant had been guilty of ill treatment toward his wife, was, during a portion of the time, was in a delicate state of health. A charge had been made by the defendant against plaintiff, that the last child born was not his. That, in the eye of the law, if it were not substantiated by proof, would be sufficient ground for the court to grant her a divorce from her husband. It was a species of cruelty on the part of the husband which the law recognized. The court further said there was no testimony giving the plaintiff a bad character. It was true she had exhibited some degree of temper, but the court thought it was no more than any woman placed in her situation might exhibit. A decree was granted for plaintiff, giving her the custody of the two children, the issue of the marriage. The parties were given an opportunity to arrange between themselves the amount of alimony to be given her.

John Koehler sought a divorce from his wife, Clara Koehler, on the ground of abandonment in Sept., 1868, without just cause. The plaintiff's attorney stated that at the time of the marriage the plaintiff was under an arrest under the bastardy act, and was compelled to marry the defendant, but that she had since refused to live with him. The defendant asked for a decree on the ground of abandonment a month prior to the alleged abandonment on her part. The mother of the plaintiff testified that the defendant refused to marry her son until she got a silk dress; then, without any intimations on her part, she got a warrant for him and had him arrested, and they were married in the Squire's office. On cross-examination she denied that her son had sought the divorce in order to enable him to marry again. Testimony was also introduced by the plaintiff showing that he had sent his wife the olive branch of peace and asked to be permitted to return to her. It was on the occasion of the christening of the child. He was at the foot of the stairs of the defendant's mother's house, and sent up his message. Word was returned by either the defendant or her sister, the witness knew not which, that if he went up stairs he would be kicked down again—a sensation he did not desire to experience; so he discreetly left. On another occasion the defendant told a friend and messenger of the plaintiff that she would return to him if he would act a man and provide a support for herself and child. But the plaintiff said he hated to go to her house, but would like to meet her somewhere else. The defence introduced no testimony.

Judge Cox, in disposing of the case, said the best thing the young people could do would be to live together and take care of their child. He advised them to get a little nest of their own, away from either of their parents. Young people, he said, generally get into trouble when they attempt to live at home with the old people after marriage. With a view to a final coming together of the parties, the court dismissed the petition, but allowed defendant $20 per month alimony for the support of herself and child.

In the case of Joel Gibbs against Susan Gibbs, the plaintiff was placed upon the stand, and made a denial of the charges of his daughter-in-law, in regard to his conduct with Susie Paine in the blackberry patch, last June. Some other uninteresting testimony was taken, and the case again laid over, in order to obtain the testimony of Mr. Gresbox, by whom the plaintiff expects to make his case out.—Cincinnati Enquirer, Jan. 10th.

ANOTHER LOVE TRAGEDY.

A WOMAN'S FATAL USE OF A PISTOL.

Cases of the kind above intimated appear to be very numerous just now, one of the more recent having occurred at Utica, N. Y., on Jan. 17th, for which we have space for the following curtailed particulars only:—

On Saturday, Jan. 13th, Mrs. Josephine McCarty, of Albany, went to Utica, and on the following Tuesday morning got into a street car, in which was Mr. Milton H. Thomson, accompanied by a friend. She sat in the rear corner, on the west side, Mr. Thomson occupying a seat directly opposite. When near the house of the Hon. O. B. Matteson, the woman rose to her feet and addressed some remarks to Mr. Thomson, which no one else in the car understood. She then leaned over, holding her ear down to catch the reply. Immediately afterwards the report of a pistol was heard, and at the same instant Mr. Thomson threw his head back against the side of the car. Blood started profusely from the lower part of his face, which he endeavored to staunch with his handkerchief. His friend, Henry B. Hall, of Ogdensburg, who was seated beside him when the shot was fired, sprang to his feet and then fell dead upon the car floor.

A terrible scene ensued. The horrified passengers were unable to recover for some minutes, and the woman, taking advantage of the panic, walked out of the car and proceeded onward to the hotel, bearing her muff behind. The conductor stopped the car to procure medical aid for Mr. Thomson, and requested one of the passengers to follow Mrs. McCarty. He did so, and she was arrested opposite the City Hall, with the pistol still in her possession. She refused to shot Thomson to save her children. She accused him of being her evil spirit, and said she had only done her duty in shooting him. She several times remarked that "America has plenty of law, but not enough justice."

Mr. Thomson and the body of Mr. Hall were taken to the Butterfield house. The ball entered Mr. Thomson's left cheek, passing out through the right nostril. It is painful, though not necessarily a dangerous wound. It is said by persons in the car that Thomson threw his head back at the instant the shot was fired, and thereby saved his life, but it was at the sacrifice of the life of his friend. The ball entered Mr. Hall's left side, near the collar bone, passing down and cutting the aorta, and lodging in the left lung. Internal hemorrhage was the immediate cause of death, which must have been almost or quite instantaneous. Mr. Hall, the innocent victim of this terrible tragedy, was a coal merchant in Ogdensburg.

Immediately after the arrest of Mrs. McCarty, alias Mrs. Dr. Burleigh, she was the centre of observation for as many sensation seekers as could gain admittance to the station house. She is about forty-five years of age, lady-like in appearance, and apparently perfectly under the influence of intense mental excitement. She wore a neatly fitting black alpaca dress and an imitation sealskin jacket. On her hat she wore a heavy veil, which was much of the time partially drawn over her face. She came from Yorkville in her own carriage, and it was during her arrival that she became acquainted with Milton H. Thomson. She married a Scotchman named McCarty, with whom she went to Europe. After her return she left her husband, and subsequently, it was alleged, obtained a divorce, through the persuasion of Mr. Thomson.

"Mrs. Dr. Burleigh, murderess of Mr. Hall" says the Albany Argus, "is well known in this city, where she has resided for seven or eight years. In 1868 or 1869 she was a kept mistress of a noted politician of this state, and lived in elegant style, a la Mansfield, at one of the principal hotels of this city. The legislation of those years is reported and is personally connected to have been largely influenced by Dr. Burleigh, who was then in business with many of the leading politicians, her parlors at the hotel being the resort of many prominent men. She disappeared from here very suddenly early in the year 1869, and was next heard of down on the Potomac, where she was engaged in the schools, though ever timed ever to the rebels. The general in command of one of the divisions on the extreme outer line of the United States forces (and who is at present in this city) arrested her there several times as a rebel spy, finding quantities of her personal papers upon her. She was known as 'Johnny McCarty, the blockade runner.' On each occasion the general in command received a peremptory order from the then secretary of war, directing her immediate discharge. The power behind the throne which followed the woman and always interposed its protecting hand was never known to those in command, and ever afterwards she was left to go and come through the lines at will.

Possessing an intelligent face, dark eyes, petite figure, and dressing in elegant costume, she was a woman that attracted attention wherever met with. It appears that while on board one of the river steam-boats, bound for New York, while she was living on Broadway, she met Mr. Thomson, and they occupied her room on the boat that night. The result of this meeting she claimed, was a little girl. On her return home, having ascertained the name and residence of her companion, she commenced a series of black-mailing operations—at times drawing on Mr. Thomson. It is claimed, for $500 to $800. He arranged for her removal to Howard street, purchasing the property for her to live in. Her demands became larger and more frequent, and some months ago he refused to honor them, saying he had already done more than she ought to ask of him. She then went to Utica, told the story in public, which finally reached Mr. T.'s family. Not heeding her repeated demands, he finally sold the house on Howard street, and Mrs. Burleigh, refusing to leave the premises under an allotted time designated by the courts, her effects were taken from the house by the sheriff. As might be expected, the case has created great excitement in Utica.

THE GREEN-EYED MONSTER.—There was gathered at the office of Alderman McMasters, in the Fifth Ward, last night, a lively crowd, for the purpose of hearing the developments in the case of a young woman named Jennie Riley, who was charged, before the magistrate mentioned, with attacking one Miss Minnie Adams on the public street, and administering to the fragile creature quite a severe beating. The encounter took place on Third avenue, and, as developed in the testimony, it appears that a male subject of their common admiration was the cause of it. Miss Riley conceived him to be eternally devoted to her, when the Adams opposition appeared on the amatory course and won his smiles from their original intended destination. There being no fury like that of woman, the rejected maiden "went for" her successor in the fellow's affections in a right lively style. She was last night committed to jail in consequence.—Pittsburgh Dispatch, Jan. 18th.

A COLORED COURTESAN.—Hattie Miller, a somewhat prominent negro courtesan, of St. Louis, Mo., attempted to drown herself on the 9th inst., by jumping from a barge at the bridge. She was seen and caught by a private watchman just as she went over the side of the boat. A quarrel with "her man," attended by general despondency, was the moving cause assigned for the rash act, which the unfortunate promises to repeat as soon as she is released from custody.

PEDESTRIANISM.

CHAMPION BICYCLE RACE.—A one mile match, for the bicycle championship and £25 a side, took place at the Aston Cross Grounds, Birmingham, Eng., on Dec. 23d, between J. T. Johnson and E. Shelton. It will be recollected that these men contended some months since, when Shelton proved the victor, doing the distance in 3min 22sec. Johnson not relishing his defeat, another match was made, which was brought off on Nov. 25th, when Johnson proved the winner by 28 yards, doing the distance in 3min 40⅗sec, thus making it trick and tie. Shelton was not satisfied, and he challenged Johnson to go the same distance again. The men showed on the grounds at 4 o'clock, Johnson riding a 52-inch machine, and Shelton 55½-inch driving wheel. They were disputched by report of pistol, Johnson going away with a flying start, and at the second lap (six laps and 68 yards for the mile) had the lead by 20 yards, at the third by 40 yards. At the fourth lap Shelton began to decrease the gap, but was unable to reach his opponent, who finished an easy winner by a score of yards. Time, 3min 58sec. Betting brisk at 5 and 6 to 4 on Johnson, who again holds the title of Champion of England and Belgium. Mr. Wager was referee, and J. Burton starter.

HINDLE DEFEATS WALSH.—At the Powderhall Grounds, Edinburgh, Scotland, those clippers, Geo. Walsh and R. Hindle, ran five hundred yards, for £25 a side, on Dec. 30th. Both men appeared in fine condition. Hindle, however, had rather the pull in that respect. Tom Quin, of Glasgow, the well-known trainer, looked after the interests of the Paisley lad, while Walsh was attended by J. Spalding, of Hawick. The men were started by report of pistol, and went off at a good pace. On passing the stand, Hindle led by a quarter of a yard. On making the upper turn, Walsh ran wide, and Hindle added fully a yard to his advantage. Going down the back stretch, Walsh began to make up his ground, and all but collared Hindle, but on making the last turn for home, Hindle left his opponent, and Walsh, notwithstanding his determined efforts, was unable to get up to his man; seeing which he eased a little at the finish, and Hindie won after a good race by two yards. Time, 61½ sec. T. Callaghan fired the pistol, and one of the proprietors of the grounds officiated as referee.

FOUR HUNDRED YARDS RACE.—C. Mills and J. Taylor ran 400 yards, for £20, at the Aston Cross Grounds, Birmingham, Eng., on Dec. 23d. Taylor went away with the lead, which he retained for 50 yards, when Mills went in front, and kept the lead till about 80 yards from the finish, when Taylor, who made a determined effort, got abreast of his opponent, and so ran for a few yards, but Taylor's effort pumped him out, for Mills finished the winner by five yards. Betting opened at 6 to 4 and closed at 2 to 1 on Mills. Mr. Wager was referee and J. Burton starter.

At the recent meeting of this club the following gentlemen were elected officers to serve for the ensuing year:—President, A. C. Barclay; vice president, C. S. Patterson; secretary, R. W. Clay, 600 Locust street; treasurer, W. Welsh, Jr., 218 South Delaware avenue. Ground committee, A. C. Barclay, Horace Magee, I. P. Newbold, R. W. Clay, W. Welsh, Jr.

DEATH OF A CRICKETER.—On Thursday, Jan. 18th, Mr. Wm. Linder, for a long time a member of the Nonantum Cricket Club, died at Newton, Mass., from Bright's disease of the kidneys, after an illness of six months. He was but 29 years old.

THE TURF.

DEATH OF AN ENGLISH TURFMAN.—Wyndham Smith, a son of the famous Sydney Smith, died, recently, in London at an advanced age. He was a most eccentric character, and was commonly known by the name "Assassin Smith," from the following circumstance:—Nearly forty years ago some of Wyndham Smith's college friends turned loose a ferocious bulldog into his rooms at night and waited below in the quadrangle to watch the denouement of their practical joke. "The Assassin" entered his rooms, a scuffle was heard, and presently a window was thrown open, out of which the dog appeared, held suspended in the air by the left hand of its human antagonist, who proceeded with his right to draw a razor across the struggling animal's throat. From that night until his dying hour the name of "The Assassin" clung to the slayer of the bulldog. Although a son of the celebrated author and divine, his passion for the turf ruined his prospects in the church, to the great annoyance and sorrow of his father, who on one occasion angrily told him:—"Sir, you will come to selling correct cards on the race course, and you will be put in the stocks because they are not correct." His horses were trained at John Scott's, as were, also, Lord Derby's at the same time, and a warm friendship existed between the two. No story elicited more laughter, some thirty-five years ago, than that which represented Wyndham Smith as placed at his father's dinner table, next to an eminent bishop, to whom, after sitting silent and abashed throughout the earlier portion of dinner, he ventured to address one question. "Has your lordship ever seriously reflected," asked the indiscreet questioner, "how long it took to get Nebuchadnezzar into condition after he had been turned out two years at grass?"

RACING AND TROTTING NOTES.—Mr. Belmont intends breeding all his Lexington mares, including Finesse, to Leamington, this season. He has recently imported the fine brood mare, Nonpariel, by Kingston, out of England's Beauty, by Irish Bird; catcher, and she is heavy in foal to Gladiator.....Col. McDaniels is going to breed the imported mare Eastern Star, by Cape Flyaway, out of a Longbow mare that he bought at the Jerome Park sale last fall, to Kentucky.....A convention of the Canadian Racing Association is to be held at Hamilton, C. W., on the 15th of February.....Canary Bird, the dam of Harry Bassett, is now 12 years old, and one of her yearling colts, by Asteroid, is among the youngsters to be sold at Woodburn Stud Farm annual sale next June.....Mr. Seth T. Bane and his sorrel mare, Idol Maid, have been suspended for non-payment of entrance money by the Fleetwood Park Association.....Seventy-six horses trotted in 2:30 and under during the past year. Goldsmith Maid trotted fourteen races and only lost a single heat, which was that in which American Girl beat her at Prospect Park last June in 2:20. She trotted ten heats below 2:20; five below 2:19, and two below 2:18.....Lt. Col. James Fisk had lived he intended giving $5,000 in prizes for a trotting meeting at Monmouth Park, N. J., during the coming summer.....The annual meeting of the National Trotting Association is to be held in Cincinnati in February.

THE CROYDON MEETING.—The Croydon steeplechases were held at Woodside, Eng., on Dec. 19th, 20th and 21st, the principal race taking place on the second day, of which we append the summary:—

THE GREAT METROPOLITAN STEEPLECHASE of 25 sovs. each, 10 ft, with 500 added; the second received 50 sovs. out of the stakes, and the third saved his stake; winners extra; about four miles; 23 subs. A. Yates entered Mr. Harvester, by Stockwell out of Greta, 6 yrs, 12st 12lbs.....Owner 1
Y. St. John entered David Copperfield, aged, 11s.....G. Holman 2
J. Bimley entered Game Trick, 6 yrs, 10st 9lb.....J. Page 3
Eleven others started. Betting—4 to 1 agst David Copperfield, 9 to 2 agst Harvester, 6 to 1 each agst Charleville and Ampleforth, 100 to 12 agst Astrochel, 16 to 1 agst Chief Tete, 25 to 1 agst St. Valentine, 40 to 1 each agst Shipdyke and Brooklet, 20 to 1 agst Brick, 25 to 1 agst Scipio, and 33 to 1 agst any other. Not value of the stakes, £540. Won in finish. Close.

RACING AT BALTIMORE.—There is every prospect that the Maryland Jockey Club meeting the next fall will be the best ever held. The Dixie Stakes for three year old colts and fillies, $100 each, half forfeit, with $1,500 added, closed with 90 nominations, so that if only six of them come to the post the winner will be entitled to $4,000, and the second and third horses to $1,000 and $500 respectively. The Central Stakes for two year olds closed with 23 nominations, and the great four mile heat race, the Sovereign Stakes, $100 each, p. p., with $1,500 added by the club, is now open for subscribers up to March 1st, and entries can be made at the post on the day of the race. The Baltimore meeting promises to increase in popularity year by year.

THE TOLLESTON CLUB. This association of wealthy duck shooters and anglers held a meeting at the office of S. M. Moore & Co., Chicago, last week, when a new constitution and by-laws were adopted, and other important financial business was transacted. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—President, S. M. Merrill; vice-president, E. S. Pike; treasurer, J. H. Foster; secretary, J. P. Dowker; executive committee, J. C. Knickerbocker, A. Ormsbee and W. F. Milligan.

BASE BALL.

CUMMINGS, THE PITCHER.

As a great deal has been published against this late Star pitcher, we have been requested to give publicity to the following card, which makes it appear that he, Cummings, has been sinned against, and the contract violated by those who engaged him before he "went back" on them. Read the card:—

A base ball reporter having severely criticised my conduct in breaking a contract with the Haymakers, leaving the public to believe that it was entirely my fault, and that I acted dishonorably, was unreasonable, etc., never allowing the public to know anything except the simple fact of the contract being broken, whereas he knew all of the facts, a brief statement will enable the public to place the odium where it properly belongs.

In the month of September the Haymakers made an effort to secure my services for the season of 1871; I was willing to accept their offer, provided they would pay a portion down. Their agent telegraphed the directors of said club the terms, and received an answer, saying "Have him sign the papers, send them up, and we will send a check." The agent gave me the telegram (which I now hold), and he promised faithfully to have the check here in two days. I accordingly signed the contract (supposing I was dealing with men of honor), and waited for the check, which never came. After waiting a long time I refused to have anything more to do with them, as they obtained my signature under false pretences. Soon after this the directors of the Athletic Club, of Philadelphia, applied for my services for 1872; I informed them all about the Haymaker affair, which they perfectly understood. After a time reports came out in the papers that the Haymakers would hold me to the written contract and prevent me from playing in any other club. Finding that there might be trouble if the Haymakers acted up to their written contract, viz:—To pay the balance in twelve equal monthly payments, the first due Dec., 1871, the contract with the Athletics was mutually annulled. After waiting until after the 15 h of Dec., and no money being tendered me by the Haymakers as specified in their contract, of which I hold a copy, I signed with the Mutual B. C. of New York, the managing director having full know edge of the Haymaker affair. The rumors of my engagements with the Atlantics and Stars are all false. Now, then, is it honorable for a club to make an engagement, as the Haymakers did, and not live up to any part of it? Is the player expected to do everything and the club nothing? Is it so very dishonorable to refuse to be held by that contract? Is it particularly honorable for a reporter to lead the public to believe that the fault is mine with me, when he knows he is the whole case?

As to bringing the matter before the Convention, I hope he will; I shall, however; and then the public can decide who is right. As to being unreliable, I leave that to persons who have been continually on the field at the Star matches. How many times have they seen me absent? I have played when I should have been in bed, and where I had to go after the game. I leave the two statements for the impartial decision of the public. Very respectfully,

W. A. CUMMINGS,
late pitcher of the Star Club, of Brooklyn.

THE ROBT. E. LEE CLUB.—At a meeting of the above club, recently held at New Orleans, the following officers were elected:—M. Flannary, president; C. S. Myatt, corresponding secretary; J. A. Kiser, treasurer, and Jas. Hennessey, captain for the ensuing year; with the following picked nine from the best clubs south, under his command, to wit:—J. Hennessey, from the Star Club, to fill the first base and captain; Jas. Tennison, of the Crescent Club, second base; Jack Levi, of the Lee, short stop; Geo. Krummel of the Baltic, third base; Jas. Bond, of the Lee Club, left field; Barrett and Donovan, both of the Crescent Club, will fill right and centre fields respectively. This strong field will be led by Mr J. Lauer, of the Montgomery Club, as pitcher, and Thos. Baxter, late of the Quicksteps, as catcher. The Lees will make a tour north this summer.

ETNA CLUB.—At a recent meeting of this Chicago Amateur Club it was decided to strengthen last year's playing nine as much as possible, and a committee was appointed to secure the best amateur talent. The meeting appeared to be unanimous in the belief that the city would possess a first-class club next season if the press and the wealthy admirers of the game would only assist the Ætnas to procure a suitable outfit and ground.

TECUMSEH BASE BALL CLUB.—This Hamilton, Canada, club held a meeting at their club rooms on Wednesday evening, Jan. 3d, when the following officers were elected for the current year:—President, G. A. Mills; vice-president, J. E. McLeod; secretary, E. W. Kemp; treasurer, T. Gray; captain of the nine, O. Howick. This club is in a flourishing condition; they played ten matches last season and won nine.

THE KEARSARGE Base Ball Club, of Stoneham, Mass., have fixed upon the 2d of February for their sixth annual ball, to take place at the town hall. We wish 'em a merry time.

NATHAN W. JEWETT, late of the Eckford Club, advertises that he can be engaged for the coming season.

CURLING.

TORONTO vs. BUFFALO.

An international curling match was contested at Buffalo, N. Y., on Jan. 11th, between the Buffalo and Toronto clubs, for the Thomson-Scovell medal, the players from the New Dominion proving triumphant by the appended score:—

THE MONTREAL AND QUEBEC CLUBS played for one of the district medals sent out by the Royal Curling Club, of Scotland, at Montreal, on Jan 11th. The match was one of four rinks a side, two of which were played on the above, the Montrealers winning by a count of 63 to 49. The undecided games are to take place at Quebec.

THE THISTLE CURLING CLUB is the title given to a club recently organized at St. Joseph, Mo., the officers of which are as follows:—President, Thos. Rome; vice-president, W. J. Richardson; secretary, Willam Shaw; treasurer, Alex. Johnson.

YONKERS VS. BURNS.—These clubs having been designated by the National Association as the contestants for the national silver medal, played therefor on Jan. 10th, the Yonkers lads scoring an easy win, the figures being 40 to 16.

THE QUEEN CITY CALEDONIAN CLUB (Utica, N. Y.) medal was again won by Berrick's rink, composed of the following players:—Chas. Berrick (skip), George Macnoe, W. Holloway and M. Luke

DEATH OF MASTER MCGRATH.—This world-famed greyhound is no more, having died quite suddenly at the kennels of his owner, Lord Lurgan, Brownlow House, Lurgan, Ireland, on Sunday night, Dec. 24th. Master McGrath was the great canine wonder of the age, the winner of thirty-six courses in public, thrice victor in the race for the Waterloo Cup, and was vanquished but once.

THE GAME OF CHESS.

To Correspondents.

MAX JUDD, Cleveland.—We were gratified by the receipt of the games, and take the contribution as a proof of your satisfaction with our expose.

J. J. D., Albany.—Yes. Stalemate is a draw.

H. J. M.—Your batch of solutions is all correct. 785 is very "high;" and isn't 1760 a little beauty! The key-move of Mr. Curtis' hitherto unsolved problem is 1...R to Q B 6.

A. Z. HUGGINS.—Thanks for correction. That "5" you speak of is 8 in our copy.

CHECKMATE, Washington.—Prob. and Enig. 791 correct. You understand "suimate" correctly. Enig. 782.—1...B to Q R 4, K to R 7; 2...B to Q sq, K to R 8; 3...B × P +, etc.

CORRECTION.—In Prob. No. 792, the Black Kt on Q 2d should be a King; and the White Kt on Q B sq should, also, be a King. Then it's worth a trial.

Notes on "BREVITIES," AND MR. REICHHELM'S "REVIEW."—No. 12.

BY F. H. CURTIS.

PAGE 222

BREVITIES.—The announcement from the diagram is wrong, for when 12...Q to K R 5 +, K goes to his 2d, and to continue:—

13...Kt-B 6 +	K × B	14...P-Q 5 +	K-K 4

and White's forcing resources are ended, as he has lost the move gained in the following variations. Continue the game:—12...Q-R 5 +, K-K 3, and White announces mate in eight moves, thus:—

13...P-Q 6 +	K-K 4	17...Kt × P dis +	K-K 6
14...B-K B 4 +	K × B	18...Q-B 5 +	K-Q 6
15...R-B sq +	K-K 4	19...Kt-K 6 +	K-K 4
16...Kt-B 5 +	K-K 3	20...Mates.

If 12...Black K to Kt 2, White again mates in eight:—

13...Kt-B 5 +	K-B 3	17...B × P +	K × B
14...B × P +	K-K 3	18...Q-B 5 +	K-K 3
15...B-Q B 4 +	P-Q 4	19...P-Q 5 +	Moves
16...P × P +	P × P	20...Mates.

The best defence only, is given.

If 12...Black K to B 3, White mates in seven.

PAGE 226

BREVITIES.—Diagram. Wrong announcement. Mate is forced in seven moves:—

16...Q × R P +	K × Q	21...B-K 3 +	K-R 5
17...R-R 3 +	K-R 5	22...Kt-Q 2	Q-K sq(a)
18...R × Kt +	B-B 4	23...Kt-B 3 +	K moves
19...R × B +	K-Kt 5	24...Kt-K 5 + +	K-R 5
20...P-B 5 +	K × R	25...P-Kt 3 +, and 26...B mates.

(a) 22...If not, 23...Kt-B 3 +, K moves; 24...Kt-K 5 + +, and mates next move.

BREVITIES.—A few errors of typo remain unnoticed, as they speak for themselves.

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, January 22d, 1872.

We are never at a loss for amusements in this city; if we tire of the theatres, we make a run on some disreputable bank, and burst it beyond recuperation; if our citizens become ennuied with too much calm repose, we shoot somebody of note, and thereby give "the press and public" something fresh to talk about; if political matters become a trifle too much one-sided, we make a great outcry against corruption, and, hesto presto, we snake forth a brace or two of culprits and pitch into them with genuine pleasure and an earnest of our intention to create a great moral reform; when these become 'stale, flat and unprofitable," we shift our course a point or two on the weather beam, or to leeward of the breakers, just as the case may be, and burn down a schoolhouse filled with innocent children, or we blow up a ferry boat with all on board, leaving not a soul behind to tell the harrowing tale. We are full of resources. Poor Fisk is already "in the cold, cold ground," and Stokes is scarcely planted in the dark and dismal Tombs, when we sigh for other men to conquer, and mourn because they are not. Having supped full of the terrible for the time being, having seen "horrors upon horrors' head accumulate" till they have reached a height as high as Haman hung, having worked ourselves up to a tension which requires but another twist to snap the tender cord of the asunder, we calmly take the back track, turn our thoughts into more innocent pursuits and unveil a shame to B. Franklin, Esq., the Printing House Square. This gentleman would have lived to a good old age had he survived to witness the inauguration of his counterpart on the 17th inst. The performance, which was a complete success, was witnessed by a large and appreciative audience, and "standing room only" could be had at an early hour of the day. The ceremonies open with a prayer by Rev. Dr. Deems, who claimed it a privilege to open the ball in behalf of and in behalf of the printers of New York; then followed the Rev. Dr. Prime, as the prime mover in the speaking; without the slightest re-morse Professor Morse was next introduced; this is the man who helped Mister Franklin to chain the lightning, and make it subservient to his command—his remarks made a ten-strike, and were "received with thunders of applause." The "Genie Savage" of this New York Typo; raphical Society, in the native—figuratively—and poured forth his soul in thanks to Capt. De Groot for this testimonial of his esteem and good will, and to Horace Greeley, Esq., who made the presentation speech, and who told the people what he knew about farmer Benjamin. And "then the band began to play," and the enligutened audience quietly dispersed without the interference of the police, which cannot be said of some as-emblages. At night we wound up in a spree with a banquet of victuals, at which the assembled multitude developed their scientific attainments in a manner at once pleasing and invigorating. Speeches were made, but the victuals received the most careful attention. In honor of this presentation of a statue to the printers of New York, we have, by universal request, been persuaded to compose some very choice and select stanzas, which we here append as our contribution to the ceremonies of the occasion. Please read carefully, and mind your stops, to the accompaniment of slow music:—

FRANKLIN!

Written on the Unveiling of the Statue of Benjamin Franklin, in Printing House Square, New York, January 17th, 1872.

DESIGNED TO THEM PUBLIC GENERALLY, AND TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ART TYPOGRAPHIC IN PARTICULAR.

HAIL to the PRINTER'S STATUE! There we see,
In metal cast, the life-like effigy
Of one who, born to coin poetic estate,
Became in space of time most truly great.
In Boston old he first beheld the light,
Which broke with promise on his infant sight;
There was commenced his labor—his the care
Which many like him have been forc'd to face.
As of up time of the day and part of night,
That he might gain that needful height,
Where man beheld, and talked, and feel
What highest station on earth doth reveal.
In Philadelphia's city, and by its laws,
Whate'er the age, could from the dim confines
Of learning take him; mighty was the spell
That youth was put to work, and work it well.
Various his fields of labor employment, to be
With air composed, and eye transparently
Bent on his fellows, now did gain desert
High up the column of his native land.
The Prince of Science, he from heaven did bring
The lightning on its swift and lurid wing,
And for the poor, unask'd, distributed
Of wrath, good alike for heart and head
In France, our admirer, his fame is rapp'd,
E'en tho' France self in anarchy was wrapp'd;
And tho' without a diamond to tell
His worth, was voted inapartial.
No seen to call him Roman, nor to show
Him as antique: it is enough to know
That he was universal—of no age,
And bright his name on the historic page.
Lo! view his monument! that, wide and far,
Blazons a name that scarcely hath a par.

.....The Rev. Mr. Willis, one of the so-called "meek and lowly," has been making an ass of himself by kicking at a dead lion; his sermon against Jas. Fisk, Jr., on the 14th inst., was not what we should look for from a minister of the gospel, whose mission should be charity to all men. We regret that the Reverend gentleman has gone out of his usual course to dig up the corpse of one who, in life, was at least his superior in works of charity.....In answer to numerous "Constant Readers" and "Anxious Inquirers," we take the opportunity to say that Mr. Sikes, the gentleman to whom Miss Olive Logan was recently united in marriage, is not the "Sikes-y" tale we do tell? renown, so that our friends will not attempt to make a butt of him.....Among the amusements indulged in by the good people of Indianapolis is that of horse-whipping city officials. Some people have strange ideas about amusements, but these Indianapolis folk seem to enjoy themselves and be cheerful under all circumstances.....A great deal of money could be made by catching Dr. Livingstone, and exhibiting him in this country as the "deceased explorer." He would make fully as attractive a side-show as the "fat woman," or that other "living skeleton."..... The midnight fiend who threw kerosene oil on the dresses of ladies coming from places of amusement has been caught, convicted, and "sent up," and the kerosene-slinger will have no care or sin to answer for during the ensuing twelve months, for which our wives, daughters and girls owe a debt of gratitude to Judge Dowling, of the "gallant Sixth."..... Acting has got to such a state of perfection that a performer may in reality swoon upon the stage, and yet one cannot tell it from a mere faint..... Another natural curiosity has just come to light in some economical place "out west," as we learn by one of our exchanges, which says that "a woman who died, and was dead two hours, has since recovered." How this revival escapes would make a capital addition to the Livingstone story, before referred to. It must have been a thrilling moment and loss to the undertaker, though..... "Marriage" is the title of a new play about to be produced in this city, but it is not at all probable that "Marriage" will meet with as much favor as "Divorce."..... "Our Jim" insists that his dexter thumb resembles Johnny Thompson's new play, because its always "On Hand."..... The attendance was rather limited during the last week of the Florences' engagement at the Grand Opera House, because, probably, those who could have gone there found "No Thoroughfare."..... Whenever we see a female munching peanuts in the orchestra seats of a first-class theatre, our blood boils with anger, and we yearn to pitch her out of a sixth-story window, back. Such a sight we witnessed a few evenings since, and we have had "Our Jim" on the track of that degraded female ever since, and if the boy is not bribed, we shall soon expect to hear of "a strange woman found dead with holes bored into her." We are not usually wrathful, but this peanut business always makes a red-handed savage of us.....Our theatres are running pieces so long that we know every one of them by heart, and "Our Jim" says we don't know anything else. We think that if any of our prompters were to come to an untimely end we could take their places at a moment's notice—places in the theatre, you will understand. What sort of a sight have our playwrights when one play runs for several years? This unlawful act is reaching that point where virtue ceases to be a forbearance. We know a crowd of men who would be only too willing to tear out some place if we were to give them the word and some reliable whiskey. We do not claim to be of a blood-thirsty creed, neither do we take much pleasure in seeing theatres burn down when we are in them; but still, no man can always command his temper, and we think we have already had provocation enough to recklessly witness the destruction of every theatre that gives us the same play night after night. This trustworthy crowd we refer to is composed of men who have seen better days and of others in reduced circumstances, men who were thrown out of salary when the committee of seventy began to run the city of New York. This crowd are "waiting, only waiting," for something to turn up. When in office, as sinecurists, these men are mild and well mannered, and seek to quarrel with no man; but when cast out upon an unfeeling world, lunch rooms closed against them, and no quarter given them by any friendly hand, then they become demons, and are ready to wade through seas of bloody gore to maintain their rights. "A worm will turn when trod upon." So will this crowd of ours. We wage no war against women and children, but our managers must give us some blog fresh, or there is no saying what will be the end. Let them look to it. Rome fell before the iron heel of despotism and one thing or another; "freedom shrieked when Kosciusko fell;" and the draft riots must be fresh in the memory of every one; with these disrousing epochs embalmed on the public escutcheon, what might be the result were we to say to this oppressed crowd:—"Boys, it is well—gather them in, gather them in." We have said.

City Summary.

Eliza Logan (Mrs. George Wood), the wife of George Wood, lessee and manager of the museum bearing his name, at the corner of Broadway and Thirtieth streets, in this city, died on the morning of Jan. 15th, of congestion of the brain, having suffered during the past few years from a complication of diseases. She was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1829, and consequently, at the time of her decease, was in the forty-third year of her age. She was the eldest daughter of Cornelius A. Logan, who attained a high distinction as a comedian in the west and south, and who not only successfully managed several theatres at various times, but won considerable reputation as an author, his best productions being "Yankee Land," the "Vermont Wool Dealer," and a farce called "Chloroform," in the latter of which he acted the character of Amindab Slocum, with much success. At an early age the subject of our memoir was placed at an Academy in Lancaster, Pa., and received an excellent education. Approaching the years of womanhood she evinced such a strong predilection for acting that her parents decided to favor her choice, and her father commenced giving her instructions in the rudiments of the dramatic art. Her progress was rapid, and during the training she gave remarkable evidences of the possession of true dramatic genius, and made her debut at the Walnut street theatre, in her native city, in the character of Young Norval, in the tragedy of "Douglass," about the year 1841; being then some twelve years of age. Her success was decided, and shortly after she appeared in the same role as a stock actress, chiefly in the theatres of which her father was the manager, and she soon rose to a prominent position. On May 22d, 1851, she made her debut in New York city at the Broadway Theatre, then under the management of Mr. Marshall, with "Gentleman" George Barrett as stage manager, as Pauline, in the "Lady of Lyons," and during that star engagement acted among other characters Mrs. Haller, in the "Stranger," Ariel Julia, in the "Hunchback," in all of which she achieved marked success. Both previous and subsequently to this engagement Miss Logan played star engagements at all of the principal theatres in the south and west, where she was both highly popular and successful, and during that period of time was one of the best actresses in legitimate drama upon the American stage. She possessed a pleasing, mobile face, a finely rounded form, a singularly sweet voice, capable of much modulation, and her private character was beyond reproach. Her society in private was much sought after, particularly in the south and west, where many private fetes were given in her honor during her visits to the various cities. We mention this because at that time it was a comparatively rare thing for professional persons to be invited within the home circle. On the occasion of her benefits she was almost always the recipient of many rare and valuable presents, a custom then prevalent in the southern cities, composed chiefly of diamond ornaments which were then considered the only fashionable jewelry. On one of these occasions a wealthy planter, residing in the interior of Georgia, who had heard of the fame of Miss Logan, resolved to see her act, and started upon a journey of some hundreds of miles upon horseback, accompanied only by a faithful negro boy servant, for Augusta, where she was then performing. He arrived on a Friday morning, and that evening, according to theatrical custom, had been set apart for Miss Logan's benefit. The planter, accompanied by his servant, attended the performance and was more than delighted, as his subsequent conduct explains. At the end of the third act, Miss Logan, having been summoned before the curtain, returned her thanks briefly, when presents from all parts of the auditorium were handed to her upon the stage. The enthusiastic planter was for a moment confounded, as he had neglected to provide any gift, and was most anxious to convey to the lady some expression of the satisfaction which, as an artist, she had afforded him. Suddenly taking from his card case a visiting card, he wrote above his address the words "To Miss Eliza Logan, with the compliments of" and pinning it upon the coat sleeve of his faithful negro valet (worth at the then market rates some $2,000), made him present himself to his future mistress. The negro boy did as he was bade, and gained access to Miss Logan's presence beind the scenes. She was somewhat astonished, and not knowing what she could do with him during her nomadic career, resolved to return him. Keeping him at her hotel over night, Miss Logan, on the following day, returned him to his former master, with an autographic letter couched in such terms that the planter was perfectly satisfied. That is, we believe, the only instance in which a human person has been presented to a dramatic artist as a token of esteem. Her last appearance upon the stage in this city was at Wallack's Theatre, then at the corner of Broadway and Broome street, during a summer season under the management of W. Stewart. She commenced an engagement on June 18th, 1857, acting in "Evadne," and, during that engagement, on July 2d, she produced an original tragedy from the pen of Mr. Yates Levi, of Georgia, entitled "Venetia; or, the Italian Bride," in which she impersonated the title role. Miss Logan did not achieve the success during that engagement which, we think, her merits deserved, which naturally embittered her, and although many tempting offers to act in this city were subsequently made, she invariably declined. In Boston, Mass., where she played one or more engagements annually, at the Museum, she was a great favorite, Miss Logan continued her starring career through the west and south until the year 1859, when she was married to George Wood, at that time the manager of the People's Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and Wood's Theatre in Cincinnati, O., after which event she retired from public life. By her professional labors she acquired a competency, and, during the earlier portion of her career, assisted generously in giving her younger sisters a good education. Besides her husband she leaves the following near relatives to mourn her loss:—Her mother; Thomas Logan, a brother, an eminent lawyer, who enjoys a large practice in Cincinnati, O., and the Misses Olive, Celia and Alice Logan, sisters. Independent of these, her demise will be mourned by a large circle of friends in almost every city in the country. Her long connection of theatre goers as was comparatively unknown. Her funeral took place from the St. Cloud Hotel, in this city, her late residence, at one o'clock, P. M., on Jan. 17th. The attendance of the profession was not as large as it might otherwise have been, because at the same hour many of the prominent artists in the city were engaged in a work of benevolence at Niblo's Garden, endeavoring to alleviate the temporary necessities of another great artist whose career upon the dramatic stage has nearly, if not quite, terminated. Among the professionals present we noticed W. J. Florence, P. T. Barnum, F. C. Bangs, J. S. Wright, C. Barry, Dolly Davenport, G. F. Brown and W. H. Bowditch. On our first page may be seen a portrait of the lady, copied from an oil painting, the only likeness in existence, all photographs and negatives having been destroyed some years since.

Signor Vayo was the only fresh appearance at the Theatre Comique during the past week. He gave imitations of a great number of animals and insects together with the wind whistling through the shrouds of a vessel, skating on the ice, a saw mill in operation, a baby crying, etc., which were marvellously correct. The other chief attractions were the Misses Jennie Hughes and Ada Wray in serio-comic songs; Nils Wenner in character songs; M'lle Devere and the Holt Sisters in dances, and Professor Hilson in a ventriloquial scene. The burlesque entitled the "White Crook" was continued, in which a notable feature was the appearance of all the male members of the troupe appearing in female attire as a corps de ballet. The attendance has been large and the entire entertainment excellent.

The "Black Crook" with its varied attractions continued to attract large audiences, at Niblo's, during the week just closed, though no changes were made in the incidental attractions. The third act as now presented is a complete entertainment in itself, and alone is fully worth the full price of admission. The Majiltons were lavishly applauded at their every performance. The performances are announced to commence hereafter at a quarter before eight o'clock.

The successful drama of "John Garth" was the feature of the past week at Wallack's Theatre, and it attracted a liberal attendance. On Wednesday evening Mr. John Brougham was unable to appear in consequence of indisposition, and his role of Gregory Deerham was read by Mr. Charles Rockwell.

At the San Francisco Minstrels, "Mrs. Jinks of Madison Square," a song and dance performed by Bobby Newcomb, and the closing sketch of the "Green Room" were the only changes in the second part of the programme. In the first part D. S. Wambold sang "My Little One's Waiting for Me," and E. Markham's tenor voice was advantageously heard in "Hear the Cry." Sam S. Sanford did not appear during the week, as we announced he would in our last issue.

W. J. Florence closed his engagement at the Grand Opera House with the performances of Jan. 20th, having acted Obenreizer in "L'Abime" during the entire week to a limited attendance. On Sunday evening the concerts by the N nth Regiment band were resumed under the management of Mr. H. S. Jackson. At that, the fourteenth, concert, Mlle. Marie Aimee, prima donna; Mlle. Teresa Castelian, violinist, and Mlle. Eliza de Try, violoncellist, were the solo talent that performed. This evening, Jan. 20th, a dress takes possession of the Opera House, it being the first performance of that kind ever given within its walls. Messrs. Baker and Cole are still announced as the managers. The prices of admission have been reduced, and performances are announced every afternoon and evening during the week. The names of any of the performers are not announced.

The attendance was large during the past week at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. "Divorce" being the magnet, and a powerful one it has proved.

Add Ryman, Ethiopian comedian, and Sheridan and Mack, two clever song and dance men, are the new appearances at the Union Square Theatre this week. The only other change in the company is the omission of E. D. Davies, ventriloquist, who closed his engagement there on Jan. 20th. The ballet of "Les Nymphes" will not be repeated after this week, and the performances will conclude with the pantomime of "Tot," by the Lauri Family.

Miss Matilda Heron's Benefit at Niblo's Garden on Jan. 17th proved a great success, every seat in the auditorium having been sold ere the close of Tuesday, consequently, when the doors were opened on Wednesday, nothing but standing room and seats in the gallery could be purchased, and these were quickly sold. The receipts were as follows:—At the box office, $4,653; from outside tickets, $337; from private subscription, $650, making a total of $5,600, from which some three hundred dollars, for unavoidable expenses, had to be deducted, leaving the amount to be paid Miss Heron about $4,300. It was a tribute worthy of the occasion. The performance lasted over five hours, and may be considered a memorable event in dramatic annals. At the conclusion of the performances, Miss Heron addressed the audience as follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen—I don't intend to be the weakest woman in this world; but if I was the strongest, or the strongest man, you will believe I could not have strength enough to address such an audience as this in the words I would like to use. There is a common phrase which I may well use here—"words are inadequate to express my feelings" at this noble ovation given me by the public of New York and my fellow artists. We read that some are born great, some achieve greatness and others have greatness thrust upon them. I was born to be small, but very humble. I never achieved greatness and I have not vanity enough in my being to expect that it is intended to thrust greatness upon me. Still I may say that your goodness has raised me from an obscurity in which I have been for the past few years, for reasons which possibly are known to some of you, and to those in ignorance I will say that they must remain sacred—here is a skeleton in every home. From this oblivion of despair, sickness, weariness, hopelessness, I have been raised by the attack of an unknown hand. My enemy is so. Lo is, or if not him, his instruments, caused to be sent, through the medium of the associated press, tidings too horrible for me to repeat. And this, too, from the theatre where I gained my first success and triumphs. I forgive him—in my heart I bear no enmity to him—and I do make this boast before God and man, that I never did any human being any harm. His first fault was his inexperience. I ought, perhaps, to be thankful to him for what he did, for the answer that has been given by the people of noble, glorious New York. (Applause.) People can sting by word of mouth; but that is something that you can answer. But when face to face you see the sting of the pen insomething that goes deeper and deeper every hour. You see before you a woman—a poor woman, whom, probably, many of you have seen before. I have been an actress for twenty-seven years, but to-day I have no parents and no living relative save one little daughter. I am but a poor, humble woman, and it may be a consolation to you to know and to feel when you go home to-night that you have raised a woman out of the depths of misery and despair; that you have provided sustenance for the present and given her hopes for the future. Now life has come to me through your kindness, and, far beyond all else, I am thankful to you that your presence here enables me to look with calmness on the bitter past. When I read that attack, I for the first time thanked God that my father, my mother, my brothers, my relatives were dead. I still have left to me, thank God, one darling little child and if in Heaven's mercy I am spared to rear and educate her, I shall instill one sentiment into her mind, "Bijou Heron, be grateful to the people of New York for the monument they have given your mother this day." I need say more. I will only place my hand on my heart and bow in submission to thank my fellow artists; but believe me that no prayer will ascend to heaven to night more fresh and sincere than mine for your prosperity and welfare. God bless you!

During the delivery of the address both Miss Heron and the audience were visibly affected.

Considerable changes were made in the incidental attraction of "Humpty Dumpty" at the Olympic Theatre, during the past week. J. E. Taylor, skater; Mons. Robere and M'lle Emma, who performed an act entitled the "Antics of the Antipodes," closed their engagements on Jan. 13th. On the 15th, to fill their places, the Wilson brothers, three in number, acrobats; Signor Casselli, aerial gazgier; and the "Queen of the Celestials," by Mrs. Yeamans, were introduced. The Wilson brothers performed a number of difficult feats in rapid succession, which, while they defy description, may be classed as superior to any exhibition we have hitherto witnessed. They are graceful and daring, and have, by laborious practice, brought their feats closely to perfection. Their performances elicited the most lavish applause. Signor Casselli, while standing upon a small wire stretched across the stage at a height of some fifteen or fifteen feet therefrom, performed a number of feats in juggling which evinced much skill. His closing feat presented a beautiful picture. A machine resembling a lady's parasol opened was lowered from the flies to him, which he held in his hand, when, applying a lighted match to the covering, it immediately commenced to revolve rapidly, emitting a shower of colored fires which completely enveloped Sig. Casselli, and presented a kaleidoscopic appearance. His performances met with much favor. Mrs. Yeamans, clad in Chinese costume, and made up in close resemblance of an inhabitant of the Flowery Kingdom, performed several solos upon a one-stringed Chinese fiddle, and sang a song in imitation of that language, which convulsed the audience with laughter. The Carroll midgets changed their performances, and the three little boys, dressed in character, performed "Carry the News to Mary," which was encored. They appeared to much better advantage than during the previous week. A new specialty, "Dumpty Dumpty Dumpty" may be pronounced as one of the most attractive exhibitions ever presented in this city. The attendance during the past week was large.

A German opera season, called "Fabbri's Opera," was commenced at the Stadt Theatre, on Jan. 15th, under the direction of R. Mulder, W. Formes and Theodore Habelmann. "L'Africaine" was sung during the past week, with Mme. Fabbri as Selika, Jacob Muller as Nelusko, and the re-appearance of Karl Formes as Don Pedro. This evening, Jan. 22d, "Don Juan" is to be sung, in which the youthful prima donna, Miss Anna Eizer, is to make her debut on the operatic stage in the character of Zerlina, supported by the following cast:—Inez Fabbri as Donna Anna; Anna Rosetti as Elvira; Jacob Muller as Don Juan; Habelmann as Ottavio; Karl Formes as Leporello; Jos. Weinlich as the Commander; W. Formes as Mazetto.

The Parepa-Rosa Opera Troupe is to commence a brief season at the Academy of Music on Feb. 5th. Mr. Shinn, the baritone, has been added to the company, and during that season he will make his American debut in opera. At Easter, a season of Italian opera will be given, with Parepa-Rosa, Wachtel and Santley as the features.

Miss Fanny Hunt, recently with the Wyndham Comedy Company, it is reported, has been engaged at Wallack's Theatre, and will shortly appear.

Mr. John Gilbert, we are happy to state, has recovered from his recent indisposition, and has resumed his part of Gregory Deerham, in "John Garth," at Wallack's Theatre.

Strenuous efforts are being made to induce G. L. Fox to accept an engagement to act in his pantomimes at London, Eng., and the principal continental cities. The offer comes from Messrs. Benjamin Webster and Dion Boucicault, who have formed a copartnership for that speculation, and it is said that a special agent of that firm recently arrived in this city who offered Mr. Fox $1,500 in gold per week, for a term of three years, in case he would sign a contract to play in pantomime during that time, as above mentioned. Mr. Fox's traveling expenses are to be paid by the management, and they offer to deposit an amount equal to the first year's salary in a New York bank upon the signing of the contract.

A large crowd, filling the auditorium in every part, standing room even being in great demand, was assembled at Niblo's Garden on Monday evening, Jan. 15th, at its re-opening, it having been closed the three previous days and evenings on account of the death of Mrs. Geo. Wood, the wife of the manager. At the evening entertainment a fairy burlesque extravaganza, entitled "Little Red Riding Hood," and the moral drama, by the late W. W. Pratt, more familiarly known during his life time as "Beedee," entitled "Ten Nights in a Bar-room," were presented. The burlesque, point of interest, was something above the average of its class, and was well received throughout. The Misses Pauline Markham and Belle Howitt made their re-appearance upon the evening in question, acting respectively Blondinette (Little Red Riding Hood) and Colin, her lover, both of which characters were performed with much chic, and the liberal allowance of music assigned to either was rendered in a correct and pleasing manner. Their costumes, which were often rich, were tasteful, and at times rich and elegant. Harry Stewart evinced the possession of considerable burlesque talent in his impersonation of the Baron Reginald de Wolfe. A. H. Sheldon, as his Seneschal, Diavelini, appeared to far greater advantage than we have hitherto seen him, and created a great deal of mirth. The Misses Jennie Arnott and Alice Atherton, in the comparatively unimportant parts of Bertha and Perting, were richly costumed and delivered their lines carefully. Their performance of a double dance elicited a deserved encore, which was cheerfully responded to. Miss Theresa Wood appeared to advantage as a Scotch lassie, Jeannie, and danced a solo which was much applauded. R. J. Lewis deserves credit for his outre make up and acting of the brief part of Granny. Miss Nellie Levere looked charmingly as the first peasant, and Missie Jennie Satterlee deserves commendation for the care bestowed upon her rendering of the second peasant. L. R. Willard and E. Coyle gave a creditable impersonation of two extravagant ruffians. The music of the burlesque, although familiar, was well arranged and gave satisfaction. In the concluding drama T. W. Keene made his re-appearance since his European trip, and acted the character of Joe Mangan much as from the Drury Lane and Princess' theatres, of London, Eng., made his American debut in the character of Harvey Green. He has a good figure, a pleasing appearance, a good voice, and acted that character with natural ease. Little Aggy Keene acted Mary Morgan with childish simplicity, and gave much impressiveness to her singing of the well known ballad of "Father, Come Home," in the first act, which was encored. The other characters in the drama, collectively considered, were well acted. During the entire evening a great deal of enthusiasm was manifested by the entire audience, each performer, as he or she came upon the stage, being rapturously greeted, and the whole affair reminded one strongly of a first night of a season. The above named programme was acted during the balance of the week at the evening performances, and at the usual matinees the drama entitled "Rafaelle, the Reprobate," and the farce of the "Artful Dodger" constituted the programme. This evening, Jan. 22d, Johnny Thompson commences an engagement in "On Hand," and the evening's programme of the past week will be acted at the matinee performances.

The Globe Theatre, since the termination of James M. Nixon's equestrian season, on Jan. 6th, has remained without a tenant. Rumor saith that Miss Laura Keene offers to manage it for a dramatic season, provided the auditorium shall be entirely reconstructed. It is still in abeyance.

Miss Kate Raymond continued to act in "The Waifs of New York" at the Bowery, during the past week and attracted a good attendance. It was preceded during the first four evenings of the week with the "Brigands of Calabria," and on Friday "Jack Sheppard" was performed, in which Mr. O. B. Collins made his first appearance as Sheriffkin, Miss Raymond acting Jack Sheppard. On Saturday evening "Der Freischutz" was performed. Miss Raymond closed her engagement with the performances of January 20th. This evening, 22d, G. Swaine Buckley commences an engagement, acting in "Zip; or, a Life's Devotion."

M'lle Lorne and her three talented children, acrobats, were the fresh appearances during the past week at Tony Pastor's. Their performances are very attractive, being characterized with grace, ease and daring. Having quite recently reviewed their performances at length, we need only add that they were fully up to their usual standard of merit. Miss Jennie Engel, serio-comic; Miss Martha Wren and James Collins, character quetists; Sam Devere, Frank Kerns, Johnny Queen, Frank Gerard, J. A. Grave and Ben Mason continued in their specialities. Tony Pastor has introduced a new feature in connection with his songs. He invites the audience to join in the chorus, and if it be a familiar one they willingly respond. A new afterpiece by John F. Poole, entitled the "Slave's Dream," closed the performances. W. Bindley, who reappeared Jan. 14th, deserves creditable mention for his musical performances upon the concertina, harmonicon, musical glasses and other instruments. For the present week the French twin sisters, dancers; M'lle Mahretta, living statues, and Leon Whettony, comic, are announced.

An "entry" at the New York Circus, called "Blindman's Bed," was the only novelty of the past week. The pantomime was continued and the excellent equestrianism of Charley Fish and M'me Rollands, together with the musical act of the Joe Brothers, the witty remarks of D. A. Seal and the special acts of the other performers, made up a pleasing programme, which attracted a good attendance.

Although little or no change was made in the programme at Bryant's Minstrels during the past week an excellent business was done. Mr. Rockefeller, an old time favorite with this troupe, was added to the company during the past week and met with an enthusiastic reception on his re-appearance. Dan Bryant and Dave Reed continued their humorous performance of "Shoo Fly."

Col. T. A. Brown, dramatic agent, 718 Broadway, is prepared to furnish circus managers with talent of every description and the Ashton Brothers, gymnasts, jugglers, &c., advertise for an engagement through him. For further particulars, see card elsewhere.

Miss Jean Burnside, who, although engaged as a member of the stock company at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, had not yet acted there, has cancelled her engagement.

Mrs. W. A. Mocom, the widow of the late Billy Moore, the well known business manager of various theatres in this city, is to have a benefit at Niblo's Garden, through the kindness of Messrs. Jarrett & Palmer, on the afternoon of Jan. 31st. Among the volunteer talent already secured are the following:—Miss Matilda Heron in one act of "Medea;" all the principal artists who appear in the third act of the "Black Crook;" Miss Jean Burnside in an act of "Omnibus;" members of Wallack's company in a farce; the Misses Emma Howson and Pauline Markham will sing, and delegations from Bryants' and the San Francisco Minstrels will appear in their specialties.

T. B. McDonough has purchased the right of performing Mr. Watts Phillips' comedy drama entitled "On the Jury," now being performed with much success at the Royal Princess' Theatre, London, Eng., in all the principal cities and towns of this country save a few of the eastern cities. It is Mr. McDonough's intention not to produce it until next season when he will organize a dramatic company especially adapted to the characters of the drama.

Dramatic.

At Ford's Grand Opera House, Baltimore, Md., the Coombs' Combination are now performing for their second week to satisfactory audiences. Our correspondent, writing on Jan. 19th, says:—"Last Monday Oxford's delightful little comedy, 'The World of Fashion,' was presented. Miss Jane Coombs, as Marie, acted with power and feeling, and again made apparent the taste and perfection of her dressing. The Mons. Pontcalec of Frederick Robinson, a very difficult part, by the way, was an amusing and highly finished performance. Mark Bates as Adolph, and J. S. Curran as Count de Vieux-Chateau, did justice to their roles. Our correspondent, writing on Jan. 16th, says:—"Last Mon ing old artists that delighted us in our younger days are passing away, reminding us of the rapid flight of time, and causing a regret that we cannot find among the rising young artists many capable of filling the void they have created.

AT THE NATIONAL THEATRE, Washington, D. C., wrote our correspondent on Jan. 21st, "Saratoga" was performed on Jan 16th to a fair audience. This play has been emphatically the success of the season, which is mainly owing to Mr. Saville's nonchalant rendition of Bob Sackett, who loved not wisely and too much. On Thursday, Jan. 18th, for the benefit of Theodore Hamilton, "Dora" and "Black-eyed Susan" were produced and attracted a good house. In the first named play, Mr. Hamilton as Farmer Allen performed the character almost to perfection, his portrayal of the stron g-willed, passionate old man being life-like. The Dora of Miss May Saville agreeably disappointed those who considered the part outside her line of business. She playing it with a delicacy and refinement which surprised every one. Mrs. Allen by Mary Morrison was excellent. Mr. Bellmon as William Allen good, Mr. Bradshaw as Luke Bloomfield tolerable, and Master Lee Lawrence as Little Willie Allen, precocious. In the afterpiece, Mr. Hamilton depicted the woes of William, and the remainder of the characters were assumed by the company. On Saturday evening "Retainers" and the "Pet of the Petticoats" were presented. Mr. Emmett commences an engagement of six nights on Jan. 22d, in "Frita." A statement appeared in one of the N. Y. papers, several days since, to the effect that the National Theatre was closed, the company out in the cold, and Mr. J. G. Saville, the late manager, looking for an engagement. This entire announcement is without foundation, the theatre not being closed, the company not out in the cold, and Mr. Saville still being manager, and likely to remain so as long as he desires to. Although business at the National has, at times during this season, been quiet, I have the authority of Mr. Saville for stating that no money has been lost, and the salaries are all paid to date."

MISS MAGGIE MITCHELL attracted large audiences at the Pittsburgh Opera House, the past week. Our correspondent, writing on Jan. 19th, says:—"She opened on the 15th inst., in the play of 'Fanchon.' 'Jane Eyre' was given on the 16th; 'The Pearl of Savoy' on the 17th; 'Lorle' on the 18th, and 'Jane Eyre' will be produced on the 19th, for Miss Mitchell's benefit. Her Jane Eyre was a wonderful impersonation, and during the evening the lady was summoned before the curtain five times. She is supported by L. R. Shewell and a full dramatic company, the members of which are generally meritorious artists. Messrs. L. R. Shewell and W. H. Ward, are good actors. 'Fanchon' will be repeated for Saturday's matinee.....Edwin Forrest opens on the 22d. The regular stock company of this house are enjoying a season of leisure this week.....'On Hand,' with Johnny Thompson in twelve characters, was re-produced on the 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th inst., at the Fifth Avenue Opera House, to very fair patronage. The 'Wandering Dutchman,' a three act drama, will be produced for the first time in Pittsburgh on the 19th for Mr. Thompson's benefit, the beneficiare appearing as Hans Von Hicklespragnan, the Wandering Dutchman, with songs, dances and instrumental solos. Master Percy Roselle, boy actor, makes his debut on the 22d inst. in the play of the 'Boy Detective.' His engagement is for one week. Manager Beaner has just returned to the city from an extended eastern tour in search of attractions."

MISS MINNIE FOSTER, who has won considerable repute as an actress in Boston, Mass., and who some months since made her debut at the Theatre Comique, in this city, evincing great talent for the performance of specialties of that class, is to commence a star engagement at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, L. I., on Feb. 12th, when she will act in a new sketch written for her by Fred Williams, entitled "Mattie Madcap, the Household Angel." Read her card in another column.

AT COL. WOOD'S MUSEUM, Philadelphia, the attendance during the past week has been excellent, especially at the matinees on Wednesday and Saturday. An original burlesque, written by W. C. Burton, was produced on the 15th inst., bearing the title of "Sing-bad the Sailor," but is proved to be deficient in humor and point, and was therefore withdrawn after the first representations, and the farce of the "Quiet Family" was substituted at the afternoon performances. Prof. Forepaugh introduced his African lion in a series of tableaux, entitled "The Statues of Hercules." Charles A. Gardner gave his admirable Dutch songs and dances, and Miss Ada Adams appeared in choice selections from her vocal repertoire. The daily extravaganza of "The Invisible Prince" was varied on Saturday afternoon during the week, the fairy spectacle of "Cinderella" concluded the evening performances. W. C. Burton and Miss Rainforth appeared in their dashing Zouave drill act throughout the week. Bismarck, the educated pig; the sea lion, "Neptune;" Col. Goshen, the giant, and Admiral Dot, the dwarf, were among the curiosities to be witnessed here. This week Mrs. Hannah Battersby, the bad woman, will be added to the curiosities, and the spectacular drama of "Aladdin; or, The Wonderful Lamp," will be produced for the first time here.

AN ARRANGEMENT has been effected, by which Mr. John S. Clarke, now on a brief visit to Philadelphia, and Mr. E. A. Sothern will act in the Walnut and Arch Street theatres at that city on the same evenings during the week ending the 27th inst., Mr. Clarke appearing first at the Walnut in "The Heir at Law," and then at the Walnut in "Toodles," while Mr. E. A. Sothern appears first at the Arch in "Our American Cousin," and then at the Arch in "Dundreary Married and Settled."

AT DAVENPORT'S CHESTNUT STREET THEATRE, Philadelphia, the legitimate once more assumes its sway, and Mr. E. L. Davenport and his excellent company have appeared to much advantage in the following pieces during the past week:—"Hamlet," on the 15th inst.; "Merchant of Venice," on the 16th; "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," on the 17th; "The Wife," on the 18th; "St. Mark," on the 19th, and the performance on the 20th inst. consisting of "The Ticket of Leave Man" and "Jenny Lind." This week, "Othello," "Damon and Pythias," and "The Lady of Lyons" will be presented, and "Black-Eyed Susan" will be performed on the 26th inst. for the benefit of Mrs. E. L. Davenport. A project is on foot to give Mr. E. L. Davenport a substantial benefit, and it is suggested that fifty gentlemen subscribe twenty-five dollars each. Mr. Louis A. Godey has consented to act as secretary, and receive subscriptions for such benefit.

CINCINNATI THEATRICALS, up to the 19th inst. are given as follows by our regular correspondent:—"On Monday last Miss Lotta Crabtree, the Irish comedienne, opened at Wood's Theatre in the 'Colleen Bawn,' and the piece was kept on four nights to excellent business. The play was excellently put on the stage, particularly the cave scene, where Danny pushes Eily into the water. The cast was exceptionally good. Mr. Collins, as Myles Na Coppaleen, played without exaggeration and introduced several of his favorite Irish songs, and, though his voice may not be pleasant in its old time power and sweetness, it still has the happy faculty of charming its audience. The leading parts of Hardress Cregan and Kyrie Daly were both admirably rendered by Messrs. Whiting and Macaulay. Danny Man was a strong presentation by W. T. Johnson; a little too strong and Black Crookish, perhaps, but he always characterizes well. Father Tom was a genial, whole souled fellow with A. W. Church, and the remaining characters were, in general, faithfully rendered by Messrs. Wilson, Dixon and Harron. Mrs. Howard, on the feminine side, the part of Anne Chute was invested with deep feeling by Mrs. B. Macauley. Her interview with Kyrie Daly was a good piece of acting on both sides. Eily O'Connor and her songs were charmingly rendered by Jennie Prestige, though the lady at times seems a little too conscious of herself and her dress. The remaining parts of Mrs. Cregan, Sheelah Mann and Kathleen Oreagh, were taken by Miss Christie Cramptone, Mrs. Salsbury and Miss Smith, but gave no opportunity for acting. The programme for Mr. Collins' benefit to-night (Friday) is changed to 'His Last Legs' and 'Paul Clifford.' To-morrow night closes his engagement, and on Monday Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Bandman begin a season of two weeks. The 'Colleen Bawn' will be repeated as to-morrow's matinee, and 'Paul Clifford,' together with 'Rory O'More,' will be given in the evening."

P. S. CRANFORD commenced his second week at the Boston Theatre, Boston, on Jan. 15th, in "Kit, the Arkansas Traveler." Our correspondent, writing on Jan. 16th, says:—"It is certainly entitled to a run of a few months, and the scenery and tableaux were the best we have seen this season, and reflect much credit on both the stage manager and scenic artist. One of the most exciting and, at the same time, correct pictures in the play, was the bar-room fight with bowie knives and six shooters. As Kit, Mr. Cranford fully displayed his powers as a character actor, his personal and western life, and his excellent acting as the rough, energetic frontiersman of the west being excellent. Mr. Noyes, as Manuel Lopez, acquitted himself to the satisfaction of all. Mr. Eberle, as Judge Suggs, and Mr. Gilbert as Major Squiggs, we have never seen do better. As Julius Cæsar, F. R. Pierce exhibited his usual versatile powers. The James Brown and Lord Dundreary Pistiolio of Mr. Holmes did not admit of much acting, but what little they had to do was well done. J. R. Grismer as Washington Stubbs, deserves favorable mention. Mrs. Noyes, as Alice Redding, Miss Mosten, as Mrs. Stubbs, Mrs. Eberle, as Mrs. Temple, and Mrs. Pierce, as Prou Pedders, all acquitted themselves in a satisfactory manner. Last, but not least, Lillie Lee, a child six years of age, acted the part of Alice Redding's daughter capitally. The child has on several occasions filled other difficult roles, to the surprise of all. 'Kit' has made a very good run the whole week, the attendance having increased considerably, particularly on the 16th, and for Mr. Cranford's benefit, the 19th, notwithstanding a surfeit of amusements here this week. Mr. Cranford will close his engagement on the 20th with the above drama, which will be succeeded on the 22d for the first time in America, by J. K. Ward, the comedian, is announced for the coming week, opening on the 29th, in 'Through by Daylight'.....The Old Reliable' Dramatic Company, with Helen D'Este and J. G. Stutts as the leading characters, are announced for the coming week at Virginia Hall. The company will open with 'East Lynne.'"

G. SWAINE BUCKLEY, assisted by L. W. Harris, commenced a week's engagement at the Royal Lyceum, Toronto, Ont., on Jan. 15th, appearing in a new sensational drama entitled "Zip; or, a Life's Devotion." Our correspondent, writing on the 16th, says:—"As a literary effort, it does not amount to much. However, it serves to introduce Mr. Buckley in his musical specialties, in which he is good, performing correctly on about a dozen different instruments. Mr. Harris added materially to the success of the play by his artistic rendition of the role of Count Heart De Neville. William Raymond, the villainous overseer, found an able representative in the person of Allan Basford. Mr. F. Sullivan as George Briersen rendered the part in an acceptable manner. The same may be said of Mr. H. Wilton as Henry Powell. Harry Lindley as Shanks (a lawyer) tried hard to be funny, but failed, for the reason that there was nothing funny in the part. Miss Blanche Bradshaw as Miss Grisewell invested that character with an amount of feeling and pathos which was perfectly in keeping with the requirements. Miss Neville met with a kind and graceful representation in the hands of Miss Maggie Harold. Miss Florence Webster gave an excellent piece of character acting as the tipsy waiting maid, Bibb and the part of Shank, although only a small one, was raised to a prominent place in the drama by the excellent acting of Mrs. Bowers. The child actress, Miss Lillie Lee, was well received. 'Zip' was repeated on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Thursday and Friday evenings, 'On the Track,' Saturday evening, 'Long Strike.' Business has been excellent throughout the week. Miss Lillie Eldridge commences an engagement on Jan. 22d, appearing in 'Alma; or, Love in Bohemia.'"

MRS. LORRIN HOWLAND, an actress of considerable merit, died in Philadelphia, Pa., of small pox, on Jan. 18th after an illness of four days. She was a sister of W. P. Sweetland, who died upon the stage in the city of the southern Cities. Her professional career was confined almost entirely to the south. She rose rapidly in her profession and became a very good soubrette. She married some years since Harry Howland, an actor, but the union proved unfortunate and a separation took place. Her last appearance upon the stage in this city was at the Globe Theatre on Nov. 25th, 1871, where she had filled during the week leading on that date, supporting the late Mrs. Judah. She was well known and respected to the profession, and her many friends unite with her sister, Miss Trestle, and her brother, in mourning her early demise.

"VANKEE" LOCKE appeared at Lynn, Mass., on Jan. 20th, in "Ten Nights in a Barroom" under the management of H. G. Clarke, supported by a good company. A large audience was present.

FROM BOSTON, MASS., our regular report of amusements is dated Jan. 21st, and is as follows:—"At the Globe matters stand to status quo. That is to say, 'Eileen Oge' is still the attraction. It was just finished its second week, and is announced to be continued until further notice. On its withdrawal a Shakespearean comedy is to be produced, with entire new scenery and properties..... The Streets of New York' has been withdrawn from the Museum boards after four weeks of crowded houses. This week 'The Silver Spoon,' with Mr. Warren in his great specialty of Jedferson Scattering Baltrina, the member from Cranberry Centre, and preceded by the comedietta 'My Uncle's Will,' is to be the attraction except on Friday and Saturday evenings. On Friday Mr. Warren's name is up for a benefit, and he offers the 'School for Scandal,' the beneficiaire appearing as Sir Peter Teazle, when a brilliant audience is anticipated. On Saturday evening 'East Lynne' is to be produced again on account of the great demand for its repetition.....The Boston Theatre, at the close of the opera season, Monday, Jan. 29th, will be given over to the 'Streets of New York,' with Mr. Frank Mayo as Tom Badger. Mr. Chas. Parsloe and Master Smith will also appear in conjunction with the stock company, besides Delehanty and Hengler, the song and dance men. This is to be the attraction for three weeks, and at its close the Nilsson troupe begin another short opera season.....The St. James opens its new dramatic season tomorrow (Monday, Jan. 22d) under the management of Mr. W. H. Leake. The opening combination is Fox and Denier's 'Humpty Dumpty' Troupe, besides Prof. Siegrist and sons, acrobats; J. B. Kelly, musical genius, a couple of wooden-headed acrobats—automata—and an American ballet troupe, with Mdlle. De Vere as prima donna. Edwin Adams has also been engaged for a short season at this theatre, in addition to those named in my last week's letter."

MISS LYDIA THOMPSON and Troupe opened at the Mobile Theatre, Mobile, Ala., in "Blue Beard" upon Jan. 15th, for one week. Our correspondent, writing on Jan. 17th, says:—"The greeting they received was quite flattering, as the house was a perfect jam. The troupe, as a whole, dress much better than formerly; particularly was this evident in Miss Thompson and Miss Weathersby, who, in this line, are perfection. Tuesday evening, 'Gurline' was rendered to another full house, with Harry Beckett in the foreground. Miss Jennie Wheatleigh as Ripple was good, exceedingly so in her singing; also Miss Camille Dubois as Lady Una and Miss Carlotta Zerbine as Count Calimance. To-night (Wednesday) 'Kenilworth' is to be given, and upon Friday Miss Thompson will be the recipient of a benefit, when she will appear in both comedy and burlesque. This company will next appear in New Orleans."

MRS. DAVENPORT, the mother of Mrs. J. M. Davenport-Lander, the well known actress, died at Washington, D. C., on Saturday evening, Jan. 20th, of apoplexy, at a very advanced age. Under her maiden name—Miss Danby—she acquired the reputation of being a sterling actress in the provinces of England, where she continued a great favorite after her marriage with Mr. Davenport, a strolling manager. Mr. and Mrs. Davenport and their then little daughter, now Mrs. Lander, are generally supposed to have been the originals of the characters of Mr. and Mrs. Crummels and the "infant phenomenon" so admirably sketched by the late Charles Dickens in his novel of "Nicholas Nickelby." Mrs. Davenport acted but little in this country, and to the present generation of theatre-goers was utterly unknown. Although her daughter made her debut in America, at the National Theatre, New York city, in "Richard III" and "Little Pickle," on May 21st, 1838, we find no record that Mrs. Davenport acted with her, as was her custom in many later engagements. On July 18th, 1838, we find that Miss Davenport and her mother commenced an engagement at the Park Theatre, in this city, acting in "Douglass," in which the latter played Lady Randolph. During that engagement we find that Mrs. Davenport acted Portia, Lady Teazle and Queen Elizabeth. Then went to Boston, Mass., and, after a brief tour of the country, sailed for the West Indies and thence to England. On Miss Davenport's re-appearance in America, which took place at the Astor Place Opera House, in this city, Sept. 24th, 1849, Mrs. Davenport accompanied her, but, we believe, had ceased her professional career before that event. She accompanied her daughter in her starring tours throughout the country and aided her materially in her professional career. Since her advent to this country Mrs. Davenport was much liked in private circles, and, besides her daughter, there are many in various parts of the country who will mourn her loss. The funeral is to take place on Tuesday, Jan. 23d, at Washington, D. C.

THE STAR COMEDY COMPANY, under the management of Messrs. Simon, Clifford & Co., was organized at Moberly, Mo., with the following ladies and gentlemen:—J. A. Simon, Ed. Clifford, M. J. Pendelton, G. G. Campbell, G. H. Rice, I. H. Keen, A. M. Rogers, Annie Simon, Polly Florence, Frankie Campbell, Julia Forster, Allie Florence, and Little Dayton. Mr. and Mrs. Simon as the attraction. The company is billed ahead as follows:—Paris, Mo., Jan. 16th, for one week; Monroe, 23d, 24th, 25th, and Glasgo for one week.

PLUNKETT'S DRAMATIC COMPANY performed during the past week at Delevan, Ill., Jan. 15th.

AT THE BROOKLYN, N. Y., THEATRE, Mr. Charles Mathews made his first bow to the Brooklyn public on the night of January 15th, when he appeared in two of his choice comedies, viz.: "Married for Money" and "Cool as a Cucumber." Both plays were capitally placed upon the stage and admirably performed, the cast embracing Mrs. Farren, Miss Reeves, and Messrs. Chippendale, Kennedy and Loveday. These pieces drew fashionable and crowded houses for four nights, when the bill was changed, and "If I'd a Thousand a Year" and "The Critic" were produced. The cast in these plays introduced Miss Conway, Mrs. Brutone and the Misses Reeves, Clark and Fisk, together with Messrs. Chippendale, Lamb, Kennedy, Loveday, Mackay, White, Shannon and Queen. Mr. Mathews' personation of Sir Fretful Plagiary and Mr. Puff were received with loud applause; indeed, the performances throughout the week were quite a treat. The business on Saturday was crowded to excess. On the 22d he commences another engagement for five nights, opening in "Little Toddlekins" and "A Game of Speculation." At the matinee on Saturday, "Married for Money" was performed, with "Toodles" as the afterpiece.

ENTERTAINMENTS IN CHICAGO, Ill., are written about as follows by our regular correspondent, Jan. 19th:—"The Academy of Music has opened under favorable auspices, and is at present the centre of attraction. The interior of the house is neat, cosy, and is arranged especially for the comfort of the audiences. Every night since the opening the theatre has been filled to overflowing. On Monday evening 'Caste' was presented with a remnant of the Wyndham company in the principal roles. Mr. Wyndham was absent, thereby causing great dissatisfaction. If Mr. Wyndham would retain the favorable opinion of our citizens in the future he must certainly give us a better company than the one at this theatre at present. Mr. Fitzpatrick appeared in the role of George D'Alroy and acquitted himself acceptably. George Giddens and Bettil Ryan were, as usual, worthy of special notice. Miss Hosmer Bailey appeared as the 1863 in the character of Polly Eccles, and essayed the part at short notice in a highly satisfactory style. Miss Bailey has been engaged as the leading lady at this theatre. Miriam's Crime' was produced on the 16th. This evening, Saturday evening, and matinee, 'Progress.' Robert McWade opens in 'Rip' on the 22d. Mr. M. C. Daly, low comedian, Edith Stand, soubrette, J. C. Padgett and Frank Lawler are among the principal members of the company engaged. John Muir, late of Nilsson Minor, is the treasurer. Prof. Biehl leader of orchestra.....The attendance at the Globe Theatre continues good, with M'lle Marietta Ravel as the magnet. Charles Fenton's sensational play, "Wild Cat; or, Marriage by Moonlight," was presented on the 15th, and kept the boards the balance of the week. The pile driver scene is highly sensational, and produces considerable effect upon the audience. M'lle Ravel enacts the heroine of the play quite satisfactorily. Messrs. Langrishe, Chas. Wilson, Martin, Howard and Padgett, Mrs. Stoneall, the Misses Emma Maddern and Lizzie Mitnon are rendering the star excellent support. The farce of "Who's Who" is splendidly enacted by the principal members of the company. M'lle Ravel continues another week. M. V. Lingham has been secured as leading man, commencing on the 22d.....Horace Lingard commences a two weeks' siege on the 22d, at the Michigan Avenue Theatre. He is heavily billed.

MISS ADDIE KUNKEL, supported by a miscellaneous stock company, opened at the Opera House, Louisville, Ky., on Jan. 15th, to a large house, in "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," a drama of the most sensational character. Our correspondent, writing on Jan. 18th, says:—"All sorts of slang, exciting situations, villains, reformed roughs and home made, crowd the plot from the beginning to the end. Villainy predominates through three acts, but in the fourth honesty triumphs, and virtue is rewarded. Red fire, tableaux, and down goes the curtain. As Bertha, Miss Kunkel acted well; her delivery is very distinct, but she often emphasizes the wrong words, and tries to express too much by contorting her face. As Lizzette Graham, Miss Bathawy was moderately good; she has a peculiar voice that is not pleasing. The inimitable Ketchum played the character of Joe Jigwater in splendid style, and made it inexpressibly funny. Jack Ryerson, which, in competent hands, might be made the character of the play, was poorly rendered by Geo. L. Gray. As Hester Smith, Miss Ada Dow was excellent, and her song in the fourth act was mightly applauded. The cast embraces only twenty-three characters, all of which were rendered moderately well. Miss Kunkel returns to New York, and the company disband."

A LEADING MAN is wanted by Bidwell and Wilkinson, whose address find elsewhere.

GILBERT & CARROLL'S dramatic company are billed for Bucyrus, O., from Jan. 23d to 31st, and they play in Lima the following week. Artists and musicians are wanted for this organization.

A LEADING MAN, walking lady and other people are advertised for elsewhere.

THE TOWNSEND FAMILY, a correspondent informs us, are playing a successful engagement at Gloversville, N. Y. They opened on Jan. 15th to a large and appreciative audience, which has nightly increased both in numbers and respectability. They remain three more nights, the last of which they will produce their specialty, "King Richard III," with John Townsend in the title role.

MRS. CLARIDGE and Robt. Hunting, gymnasts and trapeze performers, at present performing at Berry's Theatre Comique, Williamsburg, Pa., where they can be addressed, want an engagement.

LA PETITE BENSON, juvenile song and dance performer; Jennie Benson, clog dancer, and Prof. Jas. Fish, leader of orchestra and brass band, can be engaged. For further particulars and press notices, see the advertisement.

THE PHILADELPHIA VARIETIES last week displayed a considerable improvement in the programme, which was received with very agreeable variety, and was followed by large audiences. Miss Polly Daly, who is deservedly a great favorite, was warmly applauded and encored in her serio-comic songs. The Freeman Sisters please the audiences immensely, their serio-comic duets being most ably rendered. The performance commenced with the drama of "The Sheep Stealers," which gave Edwin Blanchard an opportunity for the display of his generally forcible and characteristic acting, and the other characters were well represented by Miss Lucy Clifton, G. H. Radcliffe and H. W. Williams. George A. Knight is an able representative of Dutch eccentricities, whilst his personations are marked by excellent humor and a laudable absence of vulgarity. The other noticeable features were:—An excellent sol on the trapeze by Miss Clarissa Hunting and Robert Hunting, the Female Minstrels, in which the excellent vocalisation of Miss Mary Prince is warmly appreciated; the well-executed songs and dances of Billy Barry, and the ballet of "The Loves of Venus," in which the terpsichorean efforts of M'lle Deserri, Emma Bruce, Louise Bias and Mary Fraser are most conspicuous. Billy Barry did not appear in the early part of last week in consequence of the death of his brother, and Harry Kernell was also prevented from appearing by reason of sickness. Miss Blanchard, Ella Graham and Robert and Clarissa Hunting closed here on the 20th inst. On the 22d inst., John Harris and Charles Clark, Ethiopian comedians, commence an engagement, and Charles Mathews and La Belle Celeste make their first appearance in a trapeze act.

JOHN BARRY, a younger brother of the Ethiopian comedian, Billy Barry, of Mortimer's Varieties, Philadelphia, died suddenly on the 13th inst., at his residence in New York city, at the early age of seventeen. The deceased was well and favorably known both in New York city and Philadelphia, and his funeral, which took place on the 15th inst., was numerously attended. The many friends of Billy Barry sincerely sympathize with him in his sad bereavement.

TURNER AND LESTER, song and dance men, concluded a successful engagement at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, on the 20th, and open at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, on the 5th of February, for three weeks, and at Fred. Aima' Varieties, Pittsburgh, February 26th.

JOHN T. KELLY and Andy Hughes, in their characteristic Irish specialties, are meeting with much success at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia. They open on the 4th of February, at Tony Pastor's, New York, for a couple of weeks, and at Fred. Aima, Pittsburgh, Feb. 19th; Metropolitan Hall, Washington, March 3d; Baltimore Opera House, March 17th, and will re-open at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, March 31st.

CHARLEY HOWARD closes at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, on the 3d of February, and opens at Trimble's Varieties, February 5th.

MONSR. DE LAYA, tight-rope performer, and Lilla and Zoe, flying trapeze artists, sailed for England on Saturday, Jan. 13th.

MRS. MARY ANN LAWLOR, a sister of Johnny McVeigh, Ethiopian comedian, died at Toledo, O., Jan. 13th, of consumption after a long and protracted illness.

THE WALNUT STREET THEATRE, Kansas City, Mo., has been filled during the past week and an excellent performance has been given. Miss Susie Starr and Lizzie Florence are the attractions at present, appearing in single and double acts. Miss Starr's dancing is very tastefully executed, and Miss Florence furnishes a pleasing mixture of songs. Pierce and Redden, by their comicalities, call down constantly the most uproarious applause; the fisting solo of Mr. Gormans is good, while the medley and character dancing of M'lle Aubrey and Miss Pauline are well received. In other features the performance is also good. Ainsley and Burns closed a very successful engagement on Jan. 18th, and have gone to Denver, Colorado. Miss Annie Hindle is announced to make her bow this evening. So wrote our correspondent on Jan. 17th.

THE HOWARD ATHENÆUM, Boston, Mass., has been full at every performance during the past week, attracted by the following bill:—The Chapman Sisters, with E. A. Locke and the company, have given "Aladdin" as their part of the entertainment. A word of praise should be given Mr. Locke, who, as Widow Twanky, was very comical. The protean stars, Jennie Worrell and Adah Richmond, have continued their songs and dances, meeting with about four encores an evening. Jennie Worrell also has danced a clog hornpipe. W. H. Lester has appeared for another week in his feats of contortion, and Lozade in some very good jugglings. Kynock and Smith have done a skating act which has shown that they understand how to do it. Billy Carter and his banjo have been enjoyed as much as ever, and, for Ethiopian acts, Bob Hart, Bloodgood and Buckley have appeared in "The Examination," and also in "Obeying Orders," except that Sam Rickey appears in the latter, while Buckley does not. The Bathe troupe have appeared in "The Queen of the Desert," and the pantomime has been "Topsy Turvy," which is capital, and shows Mamitt and Bartholomew to good advantage. For the next week six new performances are announced—M'lle and Mons. Sanyean, the gymnasts; Ella Wesner and the Raynor Brothers, character artists and comedians. The performance will close, as last week, with the pantomime, "Topsy Turvy." So wrote our correspondent on Jan. 21st.

WM. BINDLEY, manager and genius, is to be tendered a complimentary concert at Newark, N. J., on Jan. 29th, after which he can be engaged through Col. T. A. Brown.

LUCY ADAMS, character vocalist, at present performing at the National Theatre, Cincinnati, O., can be engaged after Feb. 5th. Address as per card elsewhere.

A STAGE MANAGER is wanted for the Variety Theatre, Scranton, Pa., by Monte Morton, who is also wanted. Billy Holland's Opera House, Memphis, Tenn., the new stars are Miss Kathleen O'Neil, serio-comic vocalist, and Miss Lizzie Sherton, premiere danseuse. As a vocalist, Miss O'Neil possesses many charms and has already made a hit. Miss Shelton is as lively as a cricket and occupied herself a favorite the first time she appeared before the footlights. Her personal appearance is interspersed with a number of neat and interesting sketches, as at the Olympic Varieties, the Henrie family and La Belle Flora, so popular in this city, are among the latest additions to the company. The black wire performance of Prof. Henrie, the song and dance of La Belle Flora, the optical delusions of Prof. Mills, the humorous contortions and vocal strains of Billy Banks, together with the songs and dances of Miss Lizzie Whelan, Lizzie Buchanan, Julia De Lee and others, go to make up a first class entertainment. So wrote our correspondent on Jan. 17th.

JEAN AND VICTOR, who can be addressed care of this office, have a new act entitled "Mischievous Apes," which has been duly copyrighted.

HARRY STANWOOD, banjoist and comedian, commences an engagement at the Alhambra, San Francisco, Cal., on Feb. 5th.

LADY VOCALISTS and dancers are wanted for the Atlantic Garden, New Orleans, La. See advertisement.

THE VICTORELLI FAMILY, gymnasts, and Annie Braddon, vocalist, commence an engagement at Broom's Opera House, Memphis, Tenn., on Jan. 29th.

FROM CINCINNATI we are informed as follows in regard to variety business by our correspondent, writing on Jan. 19th:—"The National Theatre has been doing a fair business since last report. The only new appearance the week has been Senor Zogrino, who does a trapeze act in no means more than ordinarily well; but, in addition, achieves a leap through fire that is really sensational. He springs from the upper gallery through a blazing hoop of red fire, grasps a hand-swing suspended some ten or twelve feet away, swings over to the stage and makes a second leap to catch a perpendicular rope, upon which he descends. The feat is certainly perilous. The main feature of the week has been the spectacular burlesque of the 'Field of the Cloth of Gold,' which is put on in good style, and is really well rendered, considering that most of the company are tyros in the burlesque business. Miss Sophie Worrell as Earl Darnley displayed much spirit; a well-moulded figure and some skill in the singing and dancing line, and Irene Worrell, as Lady Constance, vied with her sister in everything save the figure. As a man in skirts, nothing more could be expected. George Atkins, a good comedian, who commenced here on Friday last, appeared as Queen Catharine, and made the part very laughable. The two kings, Henry of England, and Francis of France, were capitally taken by Jacques Kruger and J. A. Kelley, the latter making a hit in a peculiar song and dance. Lizzie Riddell, as Princess Mary, with a voice of good volume, appeared to advantage as Sieur de Boissey. The rest of the cast was composed of Ella Scott as Suffolk, Maggie Willet as Sir Guy, Johnny Shay as Tete de Veau, and C. McKnight as Anne Boleyn. The infant violinist, Master James Speaight, closes this week, but is engaged to appear again in a few weeks. The programme has been made up, besides what have been mentioned, of the farce of "Grin Over a Pot;" "Grin Over Stavers;" vocalisms by Lizie Riddell and Maggie Willett; dancing by Elsie Scott, Clara Barton and Johnny Shay, and gymnastics by John Denier. The latter, and Maggie Willett, close this week, going to Chicago. On Monday, 22d, the new additions are to be Charles Walters, song and dance man; and Lucy Adams, serio-comic vocalist. Next week 'Under the Gaslight' is to be produced.....The Race Street Varieties has been doing fair business last week. On Monday night Miss Carlisle Morell made her first appearance, after about a year's absence, and was warmly welcomed. She sings ballads and comic songs in very good style. Mr. Frank Steele has continued his cow-bell solos, which meet with favor. He also gives some effective banjo solos. The dancing of Sallie Steele has met with considerable success. George May has been up to his usual mark. Joe Childs and Ida Wallace wound up their engagement yesterday, and after some idea of going hence to New Orleans. The double clog of Childs and Annie Gibbons has been a leading feature of the bills for several weeks. A varied programme is given by the members already mentioned, joined to Billy Hasson, George Wild, Fall, Gibbons, James Finley and Belle Williams, the whole concluding with the farce of 'Simple Simon.' Annie Hindle visited us with success last week, but was unable to fulfill engagement, as her railway tickets were forwarded to her.....At the Pacific, business continues excellent. The only change in the company has been the withdrawal of Gibbonolae, the contortionist. John Long, the last addition, gives a good exhibition of light and heavy balancing. The programme contains less of novelty than it should.....Business at Getz and Shrewsbury's is flourishing. The changes in the company since last report are the withdrawal of George Morton, and the engagement of Kelly and Clark, double song and dance men and contortionists, who are evidently young to the business, and have a chance to improve. Viola Stanley has been too ill to appear this week, but will resume Monday. A rich and varied programme is given by Harry Alberto, Tim Goodruff, Carr Delano, Lou Rainford, and Lillie Sanderson. Ned Rainford appears on Monday.....There have been no changes of importance at the Olympic and Apollo Halls. At the former a burlesque on 'The Black Crook,' and stationary, by Minnie Warner, are the main features.....A variety show, managed by R. E. J. Miles, will appear at Hillsborough, O., on Monday, and go thence to Chillicothe and other towns in Ohio. It will consist of Master Speight, the infant violinist; P. A. Seamon and his 'Peter Honig Family;' and Skid's panorama of the 'Burning of Chicago.'"

AT BERRY'S THEATRE COMIQUE, Wilkesbarre, Pa., the Misses Lena Cole, Doline Warren, Bessie Warren, Eva Gould, Belle Graham, Messrs. Harry Rooinson, Bobby Dailey, Frank Bell and the Morsete Brothers formed the attraction.

AT THE THIRD STREET OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, Miss Millie Wilson made her first appearance last week in serio-comic songs; Miss Maggie Nicholls appeared in evolutions upon the slack wire; Lizzie Legrange in jig dances, and Miss Lottie Harris, Lon Edwards, Maggie Mairs, Mollie Haverly, Mlle. Leonetta and Salina, and Wash Antonio, Mel Kurtz, James Gaynor and Joe Warner completed the company.

IDA KENT, Dutch song and dance man and comedian, whose address is in another column, can be engaged.

G. W. JESTER, "The Man with the Talking Hand," ventriloquist, can be engaged. Address as per advertisement.

STARS and combinations are wanted for the Opera House, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Address as per card elsewhere.

LEW R. PIKE, manager of the Theatre Comique, New Haven, Ct., took a benefit at Music Hall on Jan. 20th, at which about 2,500 persons were present. In addition to his regular company the following volunteers from New York and other places appeared:—J. H. Budworth, Sergeant J. E. Burke, fighining drill; Miss Alice Somers, song and dance; Bob Smith, Ethiopian comedian; Ike Morris, Dutch and character vocalist; George Burnham, drum soloist; Sallie Swift, club swinger, and Lew Olde, Dutch comedian and vocalist. The company start on a travelling trip of one week, during which time the Comique will be refitted. So wrote our correspondent on Jan. 21st.

AT WILD'S OPERA HOUSE, Syracuse, N. Y., business has been good during the week. Before the rising of the curtain on three evenings, the placard "standing room only" was hung out. D. L. Morris the Dutch comedian, has been the chief attraction, and has proved a strong magnet. Indeed, his Hans Von Steiglaheimer, in the humorous piece entitled the "Police Court," is a fine performance. Leona Dare, trapezist, made her first appearance Monday night. Her act took well. She is graceful and daring, and performs her postures and exciting feats each evening. Jan. 23d M. and Mlle. Delmaine will make her first appearance. Dutch Morris will remain another week and will appear Monday in "Richard No. III; or, the Podunk Tyrant." So wrote our correspondent on Jan. 20th.

HANNAH BIRCH, danceuse; Millie Ione, comic vocalist; Joe Lang, Ethiopian comedian, and Mr. Page, actor, were the new appearances at the Varieties Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Jan. 15th. Carrie Avery, after a severe spell of sickness, re-appeared on the same evening and met with a cordial reception. Hannah Birch's dance (hornpipe) was encored. Mlle. Ione's songs were well received and encored. Joe Lang is a negro comedian of more than ordinary merit. The sensational drama of "The Burning of Chicago" concluded the performance, and every scene was enthusiastically applauded. A capital show is given, and business is good. Fayette We ch left on the 15th for Baltimore, where he has a six months' engagement with Maguire. Among the new people next week will be the Holcourt Brothers, Miss Kate Brevoort, John Breian, and re-appearance of Charley Benedict. "Masonry Exposed" will be reproduced on the 22d inst. So wrote our correspondent on Jan. 21st.

FRED FOSTER, character vocalist, advertises for an engagement.

AT THE METROPOLITAN THEATRE, Springfield, Ill., business has been very fair during the past week. Sophie Gordon and Eddie Haley closed their engagements Jan. 17th. They, together with Katie Whitland and Charley Mulgro, go to Des Moines, Iowa, to open the Academy of Music. Tom Williams, the Chicago favorite, opened on Tuesday last, and made a host of friends. He is a most excellent comedian, and in his banjo solos is inimitable. He closes January 20th, to go to Chicago, Ill., to take the management of the Lake Street Opera House. Fannie Keenan is nightly encored in her comic songs. Fannie Florence continues very fair in both her singing and dancing. Fred Harris, in his motto songs, still pleases. Archie White, Dutch and Ethiopian comedian, opens to-night, taking the bone end in the first part, and Jan. 23d Andy Gallow commences a limited engagement. So wrote our correspondent on Jan. 19th.

AT THE BALTIMORE OPERA HOUSE, Baltimore, Md., Mat Wheeler, negro and Teutonic comedian; Alf. Miles, Ethiopian specialty artist; Miss Blanche Selwyn, vocalist; and Laura Le Claire opened Jan. 15th. Miss Selwyn has a fine voice, does character songs with great esprit, and takes like a fever. Jennie Benson, with her cute and precocious child, little Maggie; the Fay Sisters, Ida

AMUSEMENTS.

ACTOR'S O. OF F.
PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 4th, 1872.
At a meeting of the officers and members of "The Actor's Order of Friendship," held the above date, at their hall, No. 528 Noria Eighth street, it was, on motion, unanimously
Resolved, That it is with feelings of the deepest regret we have heard of the decease of our late professional member and brother, Joseph Parker; that, in his death, his wife and children are called upon to mourn the loss of a kind, affectionate and loving husband, father and protector; the profession is deprived of the services of one whose constant endeavor was to uphold its true aim and dignity, and the "Actor's Order of Friendship" is reluctantly forced to enter upon its "Roll of Deceased Members" the name of one who has been associated with them for so many years.
Resolved, That while we thus feel the loss of our departed friend and brother, and deeply sympathize with his bereaved family in this dark hour of their affliction, we have, in yielding to the will of an All-wise Providence, the certain and pleasing consolation that, our and their loss is his eternal gain.
Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of our deceased brother, we wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.
Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions of condolence, duly attested, be forwarded to the widow and family of our departed brother. (Signed) G. W. GILE,
President pro. tem.

THE GREAT WONDER OF THE AGE.
LA PETITE BENSON,
THE SMALLEST
SONG AND DANCE PERFORMER
ON THE AMERICAN STAGE.
EVERYBODY WILD WITH EXCITEMENT.
JENNIE BENSON,
The Champion Female Clog Dancer of the World. Also
PROF. JAMES FISH,
Leader of Orchestra and Brass Band, can be engaged by some first class traveling troupe or stationary in some first class variety theatre. What the press says of LA PETITE BENSON:
But the audience became perfectly electrified and wild with applause upon the appearance of the child wonder, La Petite Benson, in her songs and dances. She is indeed a prodigy, and the ease and grace she exhibits on the stage, for one so young, stamps her the great novelty of the day. Her voice is well trained and the infant brogue adds to the interest of her appearance. Every movement is so perfect that an old veteran of the stage could not detect an error. It is not mechanical, but in the very nature of this little wonder. Four times she was compelled to appear to satisfy one of the most elated audiences ever assembled. No one should neglect attending this entertainment, if for nothing more, just to witness this especial feature.—Baltimore Sun.
THE ST. JAMES.—The performance at this place of amusement last evening was particularly well received by the audience. Programmes were exceedingly funny. The infant wonder was again received with the wildest applause. We are certain that our citizens do not fully realize what a prodigy this child is, or they would be more eager to see her. We have never seen her equal on any stage.
AT THE ST. JAMES.—The audience was not large at this place last night, the cold weather doubtless having chilled the purposes of those who had intended going. Those present, however, expressed great satisfaction with the performance. The marvelous exhibitions of La Petite Benson created, if possible, more enthusiasm than her first appearance. This little lady perhaps has not her equal on the stage. She is a great card and is of incalculable value to any troupe. Our readers who have not seen her will miss a rare pleasure if they do not visit the St. James during the present week.
